

Fine British Clothes for men centaur
ELEGANTLY STYLED.
10532143045

THE GUARDIAN

Printed in London and Manchester

Monday April 29 1985

25p

What have the following in common?
ISAAC ASIMOV
LESLIE CHARTERS
JIMMY SAVILE
CLIVE SINCLAIR

Joseph says £1,200 claim is not remotely affordable

Teachers 'mad' not to discuss pay offer

By David Palfister

With both sides in the 12-week teachers' dispute in disarray, Sir Keith Joseph, yesterday called striking teachers mad for not discussing the £4 post-cent pay offer.

The Education Secretary said it was wrong and totally unacceptable that teachers should disrupt children's education. "It is also futile. No amount of disruptive action will change the fact that their claim for £1,200 for every teacher is not remotely affordable."

In a press statement issued by the Conservative Central Office, he said that resources for education had to be tied to economic performance.

It was a question of what the country could afford for public services "at a time when we are seeking to

"In the real world, educational advance must be married with economic feasibility," Sir Keith said.

"The better schools which we want depend upon improved teaching quality."

The future of our education service cannot be divorced from good economic performance and the effective deployment of the country's resources."

Later, on the BBC's World This Weekend, he said it was mad for the teachers not even to discuss what was being offered. He was dismayed by the damage being done to children's education.

Mr Nigel de Gruchy, deputy general secretary of the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers, last night awarded Sir Keith "an out of ten for hypocrisy and contradiction."

He said: "Sir Keith pays tribute to teachers' dedication, skill, and hard work, but then accuses them of being immoral and mean. He claims teachers are disrupting the education of their own children, but he only pays them subsistence wages."

"His government kneecaps local education authorities' finances, but then criticises teachers for not accepting arbitration as the result of which he promises no increase."

The National Union of Teachers, which has convened a meeting of teachers' unions to set an agenda for renewed negotiations, said Sir Keith's statement was "a letter from Labour's education spokesman, Mr. Giles Radice, urging them to make more money available for a reason."

Mr Radice said: "You have created an atmosphere of distrust and suspicion, and your government's policies are responsible for the slump in the morale of the teaching profession."

Legal threat, page 2; University entrance gets tougher, page 3.

store our trading competitiveness and end a long period of relative economic decline."

Sir Keith's oblique accusations of disloyalty were couched later with remarks on BBC radio in which he said teachers "seem to be maximising the damage to the children at minimum cost to themselves. That is scarcely professional."

In his first interview, Sir Keith accused teachers of "weeping crocodile tears" and "pretending that the prosecution of a pay claim was in defence of the education service. He went on: "Strikes will get the teachers nowhere. They know that. Strikes simply hurt the children."

Sir Keith said the unions had been offered a 4 per cent pay rise, arbitration, reform of the pay structure, and resumed negotiations in the Remuneration Committee. The only way in which they could now win more money was by agreeing to a reformed pay structure and changes to their working practices which would benefit pupils.

Mr Ken Livingstone in a class of his own after the decision. Picture by Frank Martin

Livingstone selected for Brent East seat

By Benjamin Hogg

Mr Ken Livingstone was selected as the Labour Party candidate for the Brent East constituency at the forthcoming general election.

The selection was announced by the party's national executive following a vote of 150 to 10 in favour of Mr Livingstone.

Mr Livingstone, who has been a member of the House of Commons since 1983, is a former Labour MP for Brent East.

He is a well-known figure in the Labour Party, having been a member of the Shadow Cabinet under Mr. Neil Kinnock.

Mr Livingstone is a member of the Labour Party's National Executive Committee and has been a vocal supporter of the party's policies.

He is also a member of the Labour Party's Parliamentary Labour Party and has been a member of the Shadow Cabinet since 1983.

Mr Livingstone is a member of the Labour Party's National Executive Committee and has been a vocal supporter of the party's policies.

He is also a member of the Labour Party's Parliamentary Labour Party and has been a member of the Shadow Cabinet since 1983.

into the local party, refused to participate in yesterday's meeting.

Mr. Ken Livingstone, who was selected as the Labour Party candidate for the Brent East constituency, is a well-known figure in the Labour Party.

He is a member of the Labour Party's National Executive Committee and has been a vocal supporter of the party's policies.

He is also a member of the Labour Party's Parliamentary Labour Party and has been a member of the Shadow Cabinet since 1983.

Mr Livingstone is a member of the Labour Party's National Executive Committee and has been a vocal supporter of the party's policies.

He is also a member of the Labour Party's Parliamentary Labour Party and has been a member of the Shadow Cabinet since 1983.

Druze seize more Christian territory

From David Hirst

AS Muslim militiamen overran more Christian villages in the hills above Sidon yesterday, Druze militiamen seized control of adjoining Christian-dominated territory north of the Awali River.

The Druzes have thereby rounded out their autonomous "canton," and dealt another heavy blow to President Gemayel's regime, the anti-Gemayel Christian rebels, and to the Christian community in general.

In a short, sharp campaign, that began after midnight and was over by dawn, Walid Jumblatt's Druzes wiped out the Lebanese Forces, the breakaway Phalangist militia leader the account of Dr. Saif Samir Geagea, in a string of positions along some eight miles of the al-Kharoub coastline north of the Awali River.

By midday, the coastal road was open to traffic. Along the length of it, the Druzes, joined by their allies of the Shiite organisation Amal, were still searching for Phalangist premises, and including in some casual looting.

We had been warning the Phalangists that they had better leave. But they did not. But our attack took them by surprise," said Abu Jihad, a Druze commander in Jiyeh.

This is what happens to agents," he said, pointing to the incinerated remains of a car and its occupant.

Two other mangled corpses, in civilian clothes, lay by the roadside. "They

Labour prepares plans to restore immunities to trade unions

By Colin Brown

Options for restoring trade union immunities removed by the present government, including a possible trade union bill of rights, are being considered by Labour Party leaders, the Shadow Chancellor, Mr Roy Hattersley, confirmed yesterday.

The options were presented in a confidential report to the TUC-Labour Party liaison committee by the returning Labour Party general secretary, Mr Jim Mortimer, and are likely to form a crucial part of the party's general election manifesto.

Labour leaders believe that a bill of rights would be possible to present to the public and would be politically more acceptable than simply restoring immunities from state action.

Mr Roy Hattersley — anxious to avoid split

But they also acknowledge the warnings given in Mr Mortimer's report that a bill of rights could involve the unions in legal wrangles which the party has sought to avoid.

Mr Hattersley, interviewed on ITV's World This Weekend programme, refused to be drawn on which of the options he preferred.

It is understood that he and other party leaders are anxious to avoid alienating the union leaders by commenting about the options before they can be considered by a liaison subcommittee.

They are conscious that Mrs Thatcher has been able to command some public support for her trade union reforms and some union leaders would not be satisfied with anything less than the complete restoration of the immunities.

However, the outcome is unlikely to go for decision to the Labour party annual conference or the TUC until next year.

The TUC-Labour Party liaison committee is more urgently discussing the detailed policy statement which will form the basis of the "Compact" between Labour and the trade unions, which Mr Hattersley officially offered last Monday.

Mr Hattersley's offer, significantly, came only hours after a meeting of the liaison committee had discussed one of the series of draft reports on the labour deal with the unions.

Although specific mention of the "national economic assessment" regarded by Labour's critics as a euphemism for a pay norm—has been omitted, Mr Hattersley is satisfied that when it is presented to the Labour Party conference and the TUC this autumn, it will imply an understanding on wage restraint.

Yesterday Mr Hattersley stressed the importance of drawing employers into the understanding on the economy between the next Labour government and the unions.

He disclosed that he had consulted the CBI before launching his attack on the budget in the Commons. This, he said, was one of the reasons why the Opposition "won" the debate on the budget.

The other difficult area to be thrashed out for the general election was the

This week

Today

MILLENNIAL MANSIONS
The third millennium is only 15 years away: who will shape our cities from the year 2000? Martin Parley begins a three-part study of the men who will build the future from the uncertainties of the present.

DEATH OF A PAPER
Tomorrow will be the last issue of the Raul Daily Mail, one of the most courageous newspapers in South Africa. Laurence Gander reflects on its fate. The Media Page, page 13

PULPIT AND POLITICS
Bishops must avoid making statements which are merely matters of opinion, argues John Selwyn Gummer. Agenda, page 10

PLUS POSY

Tomorrow

STRICKEN SCHOOLS
If Sir Keith Joseph doesn't stop messing about, education in inner London will collapse altogether, warns Education Guardian.

AFTER FIDO
For the very young or the very old, the death of a favourite pet can be disastrous. Guardian Women reports

Wednesday

THE MIRACLE WORKER
The book costs £37 and 200,000 people have bought it. It is a course in how to perform your own miracles. Society Tomorrow takes a careful look

NEWS IN BRIEF

Evans accused

THE return of the TGWU general secretaryship ballot has got off to an acrimonious start with the retiring general secretary, Mr Moss Evans, being accused of bias. Back page.

Act of defiance

MR DENRIK BOND was resisting calls for his resignation as president of Equity, the actors' union, for appearing in South Africa. Page 2.

Riots subdued

RIOTING by the poor from Algeria's coastal was subdued with tear gas and water cannon. Page 3.

Needle match

GREENPEACE leader David McTaggart sharpens the needles. Governments and companies jump when his staff use them. Page 2.

Police power

BRITAIN'S police are training for the expanded powers as the new complaints authority begins operating. Reports, page 4.

Violence vote

DERRY's non-violent Catholics are trying to convince their young that civic action is better than bullets. Local elections may show the result. Page 3.

The weather

MAINLY dry. Details, back page.

NCCL nod for rightwing aid

By Stephen Cook

The National Council for Civil Liberties yesterday reasserted its policy of denying help to such organisations as the National Front. But it passed two resolutions which appear to allow the NCCL to give aid to individuals with extreme rightwing views. A highly charged meeting also refused to endorse the interim report of an inquiry into the miners' strike.

The future of Mr Larry Gostin, the general secretary of the council, is in doubt. It is said that he was at loggerheads with much of the membership over the

Larry Gostin — future in doubt

A warm reception was given to a speech from Mr Brian Foy, a sacked miner from Betteshanger colliery, Kent, who said that four million people had been deprived of the right to work, and that the contentious part of the interim report was "a scab's charter."

Mr Peter Wallington, professor of law at Lancaster University and chairman of the panel still considering the miners' strike, said last night: "The inquiry cannot continue in its present form as an NCCL inquiry. I can't say any more until the full panel meets." Mr Gostin is also on the panel.

Several National Front members who have joined the NCCL were at the meeting, and one failed in his demand to speak in its defence. Twenty out of 40 people who had put in written requests to speak were called, and it is not clear if he had submitted such a request.

The meeting enthusiastically carried a resolution deploring press reports intimating splits in the NCCL, the resignation of Mr Gostin, and the foundation of a new body.

Turn to back page, col. 5

Egyptians free 'plot' Britons

From Kathryn Davies

Two Britons accused by the Egyptian authorities of involvement in a conspiracy to kill an exiled opponent of the Libyan leader, Colonel Gaddafi, are to be deported from Cairo within the next few days without formal charges having been brought against them at any stage.

Mr Godfrey Shiner, aged 47, a Coventry-based engineering consultant who was released on £20,000 bail two months ago, has been told to collect his passport from the Egyptian state prosecutor's office.

Mr Anthony Gill, who has remained in custody since the accusations last November, is also to be deported to Britain. Two Maltese also accused by the Egyptians are to be flown directly to Malta.

The two Britons were interviewed by officers from Scotland Yard's Anti-Terrorist Branch during their detention, but yesterday police sources would not discuss whether they wanted to interview or their map further.

Egyptian police gave no reason for not laying formal charges against any of the men, who the Egyptians had accused of taking part in a conspiracy to murder Mr Abdel-Hamid Bakoush, a former Libyan prime minister who lives in Cairo.

Mr Bakoush is the secretary-general of the Libyan Liberation Organisation dedicated to the downfall of Colonel Gaddafi's government.

According to Mr Ahmed Rasbida, Egypt's interior minister, Egyptian security forces failed to murder Mr Bakoush and mounted their own operation to persuade Colonel Gaddafi that the plot had succeeded.

Fake photographs of Mr Bakoush, apparently riddled with bullets, were sent to Libyan government agents, who then dramatically announced the exile's death on Libyan radio.

Mr Shiner has consistently denied during his three months in detention that he was involved in the affair, saying that he flew to Cairo at the request of Mr Gill who telephoned him to say that he had been badly injured in a road accident and needed help to pay his hospital bill.

Mr Shiner, who spent six years representing British companies in Libya, denied having any connection with the Libyan government or its agents' activities in Britain.

Mr Gill signed a lengthy confession while in custody saying that he had been sent to recruit him men to kill Mr Bakoush. The men turned out to be Egyptian agents.

Fowler confident on reforms

By Colin Brown

Treasury challenges to Mr Norman Fowler's social security reviews are to be resolved at a committee before Thursday's Cabinet meeting.

Ministers insisted yesterday that there was no deep division between Mr Fowler, the Social Services Secretary, and the Chancellor, Mr. Nigel Lawson.

The Treasury is concerned about a number of detailed points, including the cost of switching the State Earnings Related Pensions Scheme to private insurance firms.

But the Treasury circulated a paper on tax and social security shortly before last week's Cabinet meeting which postponed discussion of the reviews.

Although Mr Fowler was irritated that the Treasury paper should be introduced only 24 hours before the meeting it was emphasised that this was largely due to the Chancellor's commitments abroad.

Mr Fowler remains confident that his package will be accepted largely unchanged.

Hugo Young, page 12

A simple plan for your retirement that could pay you £30,000 a year (And why you'll need it)

The Government says it has inflation linked. Will that help you when it comes to the day you retire?

Because even if inflation continues at the present rate of 5% — simply to have the equivalent of the present rather meagre state pension for a married couple of £57.30 a week, you would need £316 a week 35 years from now (or £316,432 a year).

That's why the figure we quote above, which may seem rather large at first sight, is quite a sensible one.

More to the point, it's easily attainable if you act now. For as little as £45 a month — much of it funded by the taxman — you could enjoy £30,000 a year in 35 years' time, when you are 65.

At Legal & General we already provide for the futures of about one million people with plans designed to suit their needs.

So think of your future needs.

Do you really think that you could live on the equivalent of £5730 a week 35 years from now?

Don't take chances on something of this importance. Send now for free information, or phone 01-200 0200, without obligation, and start funding your happy retirement now.

The above figures are based on our current assumptions. Full details are available on request.

RING 01-200 0200 OR POST TODAY

Post to: Legal & General Assurance Society Ltd., Freeport, Croydon CR9 9EB (no stamp needed)

Yes, I would like to know how to get the best from my pension. I am (please tick) ☐ a partner ☐ self-employed ☐ an employee not in a company pension scheme

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____ Tel. _____

Name of financial adviser (if any) _____

Legal & General

INSIDE

- Agenda 11
- Arts, reviews 21
- Business & finance 22, 23
- Crosswords 28, 30
- Guardian Women 20
- Home News 2-4, 30
- Letters 12
- Overseas News 6, 8-10
- Media 13-18
- Motoring 24
- Sports News 24-27
- TV & RADIO 28
- ENTERTAINMENTS 28
- PERSONAL 29

Labour ponders a bill of rights for trade unionists

LABOUR Party leaders are considering replacing the present Government's employment legislation with a bill of rights for trade unionists on the return of a Labour administration.

Discussion is still at an early stage, but the TUC-Labour Party Liaison Committee has already considered a lengthy paper from the party's retiring general secretary, Mr Jim Mortimer.

The paper says: "It is not sufficient to ask for the repeal of the Employment Act 1980, 1982 and the Trade Union Act 1984. Something new has to be put in their place."

Mr Mortimer's paper attempts to set out a new framework for a bill of rights, based on the principles of the 1926 and 1927 Acts, but providing new statutory rights for trade unionists and restoring union immunity from legal action, the traditional choice favoured Repealing the union laws of the Tories is not enough, says Mr Jim Mortimer (right). Patrick Wintour examines the options for reform he has set out for his party by the labour movement.

Some Labour strategists argue that new statutory rights might be more politically appealing than simple repeal of widely popular legislation.

Such a move might be seen to usher in a new era of industrial relations rather than a simple restoration of the "bad old days of the 1920s and 30s." Any new rights could be balanced by giving unions new responsibilities, it is argued.

Mr John Prescott, Labour's employment spokesman, said yesterday: "I approach the issue with an open mind. People should not assume that it will be a simple return to the legislative position of ten years ago. It's time to look afresh at the issue of industrial citizenship and the rights of trade unionists in our society."

It is widely recognised that the issue threatens to be one of the most sensitive facing the Labour Party in its attempt to present a new modern image to the electorate. The present intention is to prepare a statement for next year's party conference. The conference this year will hear a statement on full employment and planning.

Mr Mortimer, a highly respected former chairman of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service points out in his paper: "The assertion of statutory rights has the potential attraction of providing a framework of readily understood rules."

"Thus, such a framework of rights might include the right to organise a trade union, to bargain collectively, to strike, to seek to provide solidarity action, peacefully to demonstrate and to seek to persuade others in the course of a dispute and to conduct the affairs of a trade union without state interference."

But in a strong argument against such a course, Mr Mortimer says: "It is not possible simultaneously to provide positive legal rights, but yet to keep the courts out of industrial relations... the interpretation of these rights falls to the courts."

"The almost universal experience of other countries is that the courts come to see it as their duty to lay down the limits of these rights. Judicial interpretation may be very different from that intended by the legislature."

Mr Mortimer also points out that the provision of positive rights would go against the grain of previous industrial relations legislation, which had been intended to exclude trade disputes from judicial review by the courts. Substantial parts of this legislation are still on the statute book.

Although attempting to present a balanced review of the choice facing the Labour movement, Mr Mortimer appears to prefer restoration and extension of immunities while finding a means of introducing supporting legislation "which, without inviting the frequent intervention of the courts, would nevertheless encourage trade union organisation, trade union recognition and collective bargaining."

Mr Mortimer suggests repealing the Tory Government's employment legislation, reintroducing the immunities which those statutes abolished and introducing "state sponsored" collective bargaining, such as the right of representation already enshrined in the Health and Safety at Work Act.

The paper also suggests a radical overhaul of trade union rights, by spending money on politics, by calling for an end to the distinction between a union's political and general funds under the Trade Union Act, 1913.

Mr Mortimer comments: "The trade union movement lived with the 1913 act not because it was acceptable in principle, but because in practice it did not seriously impede most unions from pursuing political objectives."

"Now that the Conservative Party has deliberately upset this arrangement without any corresponding limitation

Greenpeace sets its target on arms race

Goliaths face a David who is tough, clever and likes to win. Report by Paul Brown

TWO Greenpeace ships set sail last week for the summer's campaigning, rising apprehension in governments and big companies.

Companies know that the attentions of Greenpeace could cost them a lot of money by forcing them to clean up pollution. Governments fear the power of adverse publicity and the new green vote.

Yet, this troublesome organisation is tiny and run on a shoestring.

At the international headquarters at Exeter, Sussex, there is a staff of 60, most of whom seem to be elsewhere in the world on a campaign.

The oldest member of the staff, at 52, is David McTaggart, the chairman of the international board and founder of Greenpeace. He rarely gives interviews and shuns personal publicity although 12 years ago his picture was on the world's front pages as he took on the French in the Pacific.

In successive years, his yacht was rammed by the French navy and he was beaten up by their commandos. But he succeeded in stopping the atmospheric nuclear tests at Mururoa.

McTaggart says his main quarrel with the French was not the nuclear testing but the fact they were acting in a manner contrary to the law of the sea, preventing him sailing where he wanted to in the Pacific by cordoning off vast tracts of international waters.

His defence of the oceans and things that live in it have been the cornerstone of Greenpeace success. Helping small furry animals and whales has brought support from millions of people and, despite the organisation's lack of resources and manpower, his volunteers have enormous success in stopping animal slaughter and pollution.

David McTaggart gives needle-sharp leadership to Greenpeace. Picture by Frank Martin

Sitting behind a desk and talking to national headquarters in 16 countries on the phone, Mr McTaggart is brisk and his language peppered with four-letter words. Behind the curious mixture of bravado and self-deprecation is a clear-thinking, tough man, who is planning two years ahead on how best to bring pressure to bear on governments.

This year his target is to get some advance on nuclear test bans and disarmament. He has found his weak link in Article 6 of the Non-Proliferation Treaty and he is going for the jugular of the United States, the Soviet Union, and Britain.

The superpowers have one thing in common—wanting as few other countries as possible to have the bomb. But the 134 nations who signed the non-proliferation treaty did so on the promise of the big powers in Article 6 that they would make progress towards nuclear and general disarmament.

So while the 124 countries have kept their side of the bargain the superpowers have not. McTaggart is beginning to point out that in September when the NPT is reviewed, the treaty could begin to crumble, since the Soviet Union, America and Britain have all consistently broken it.

He has a list of countries including Argentina which are on the verge of acquiring their own bombs, but which were supposed to sign the treaty if the great powers were keeping their end of the bargain.

With every word spoken on the treaty by leading politicians from every country held in computer and ready to be repeated at a politically useful moment, Mr McTaggart is getting ready for September with behind-the-scenes contacts with many governments.

It is also no accident that the Rainbow Warrior is sailing for the US missile testing range in the Marshall Islands in the Pacific and then will go onwards to try and interfere with the French at Mururoa. This time the objective is the underground testing programme.

Mr McTaggart believes that fears over what will happen at the treaty review conference in September are the main reasons for the slow pace at the peace talks in Geneva. Mr McTaggart's chances of influencing the nuclear arms race appear limited, but his motto is "never take anything on unless you know you can win."

Four Greenpeace men failed to stop a ship-dumping chemical waste in the North Sea 12 miles off the coast where Dutch and Belgian territorial waters meet. The ship, the Prinsendam, said it was dumping waste from the Waddi Tanker in the Schelde estuary on Saturday night, but 1,000 tons of waste from the Bayer plant at Antwerp, Belgium, were discharged through other pipes below water level.

Whitehall top brass rebel on pay plan

By Richard Norton-Taylor

The Government has upset Whitehall permanent secretaries — its most senior civil servants — by proposing differential rates of pay for them, fixed according to the value and importance attached to the work of departments.

The proposal is one of the main reasons why this year's report of the Top Salaries Review Body, chaired by Lord Plowden, has been delayed and is now unlikely to be sent to the Prime Minister before June.

The large majority of permanent secretaries say that the plan is a diversion from the main issue, namely the relatively low salaries they get compared to senior executives in the private sector. They have passed on their doubts to the First Division Association, which represents about 8,000 senior Whitehall officials.

Under the Government's plan, the task of the permanent secretary of the Ministry of Agriculture, for example, could be regarded as far less onerous than that of his counterpart at the Department of Trade and Industry.

If salaries were determined according to the number of officials in a particular department — the simplest criterion — then the permanent secretary at the Ministry of Defence would get paid significantly more than the permanent secretary of the Foreign Office.

Permanent secretaries have been quick to point out that many other factors which can rapidly change would have to be taken into account, including the priorities of the government of the day or the amount and controversial nature of legislation affecting the work of a particular department.

Differential pay rates, they say, would harm the morale of officials in departments whose permanent secretaries came low in the pecking order. And ministers might feel that their status was related to the relative position of their permanent secretaries.

Permanent secretaries also argue that the pay differential would need to be at least £5,000. This would have implications for the salaries of other senior Whitehall posts.

There are about 25 permanent secretaries who now get £45,000 a year. The two most senior Whitehall officials have traditionally earned more: the cabinet secretary and the head of the Treasury get £51,250.

Members of the review body argue that they have a sense of grievance in proposing pay increases based on salaries in the private sector for senior officials at a time when the Government is holding down pay in the Civil Service. They are also more enthusiastic about the Government's new plan than permanent secretaries.

Permanent secretaries are already far from happy about another government suggestion, making them responsible for handing out individual merit awards to other senior officials.

Permanent secretaries argue that the plan could be divisive and that it is difficult to find acceptable criteria to measure performance.

Officials in five Whitehall departments strongly criticise the Government's scheme in motions to be debated at the annual conference next month of the First Division Association.

They say that, since it relies on subjective judgments, the system threatens "professional standards of impartiality" in the Civil Service.

Senior tax inspectors, who are among the critics of the scheme, suggest that the money would be better spent on reducing the gap in pay between the Civil Service and the private sector. The London tax inspectors' branch says that officials who benefit from the scheme should pass on the money to charity.

Equity leader refuses to quit over Natal tour

By Paul Keel

Mr Derek Bond was last night resisting calls for his resignation as president of the actors' union, Equity.

At a bitter and rowdy session of the union's annual meeting, his recent acting visit to South Africa was overwhelmingly condemned as a betrayal of Equity's stand against apartheid.

The 65-year-old actor, who as president of the union had chaired the debate in which speakers after speakers denounced his decision to appear in a production of J. B. Priestley's An Inspector Calls, which toured Natal last autumn, defied three motions critical of his behaviour which were passed at the Royal Theatre in London yesterday.

After the votes had been cast members went into uproar with chants of "out, out, out," delivered by actors who turned their backs on the platform.

But Mr Bond asserted his right under the union's constitution to hold political views without their interfering with his professional life.

At a press conference after he said he had rounded off his tour of South Africa, he refused to acknowledge this.

He regarded the South African system of government as abhorrent, but believed that the exchange of ideas — particularly the liberal ideas espoused by J. B. Priestley — benefited the campaign to end apartheid.

Only one of 15 speakers yesterday supported him, and he was jeered for his comments.

By contrast there were standing ovations from the floor for many who attacked Mr Bond.

One, the actor Hugh Manning, a former president of Equity, accused him of betraying the trust which the members had given him.

"You have insulted our Afro-Asian members. You have insulted that vast majority in South Africa who are the victims of apartheid," Mr Manning said.

Ms Vanessa Redgrave called for a tightening up of the Equity rules book, which at present advises members against performing in South Africa.

She said it should become an instruction, and any member flouting it should be expelled from the union.

Only the union's ruling council, which elects the president, can unseat him, and he was unlikely to happen when the council meets tomorrow.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Fairground inquiry

HEALTH and Safety Executive officials were yesterday inspecting the badly-damaged fairground ride at Dover, Kent, that collapsed on Saturday injuring 17 young people, aged 11 to 21.

Four girls and a boy, aged 11 to 16, are still in hospital suffering from broken limbs and other injuries, but all were said to be making good progress. Scores of people saw the ride, called the Paratrooper, crash to the ground at the fair in the town centre.

Animal rights protesters held

FIFTEEN animal rights protesters were arrested after scuffling with police during a demonstration against laboratory experiments at the Toxical Laboratories at Ladbury, Hertfordshire.

The march was one in a national day of protest, mainly aimed at laboratories which protesters claim carry out tests that involve dropping toxic substances into the eyes of rabbits to check for irritation. Fighting broke out when about 200 demonstrators got into a private field adjoining the laboratories and started to press against a security fence.

Book on dangers of pill attacked

THE Family Planning Association yesterday attacked a book which claims that no one can safely take the contraceptive pill, and that it has caused "a decade of ill-health."

But the FPA said that the book did a "considerable disservice to women taking the pill in Britain." The views expressed in the book, The Bitter Pill, by Dr Ellen Grant, were not shared by the majority of experts.

OBITUARY

Cricket editor

GORDON ROSS, editor of the Playfair Cricket Annual and the Cricket Quarterly, died at Ladbury cricket ground on Saturday. He was 65.

Appreciation, page 25

Tory peer ready with amendment ploy if Lords reject local government bill

By Collis Brown, Political Editor

Environment ministers appear ready to use an amendment to the Local Government Bill — beginning its 11-day committee stage in the Lords today — as a compromise if they suffer a defeat on demands for a strategic authority for the capital.

Lord Sandford, a Tory peer, yesterday denied that his amendment is being used as a "stalking horse" for the Government but he confirmed that he would not press for a vote when it arises for debate, probably on Tuesday.

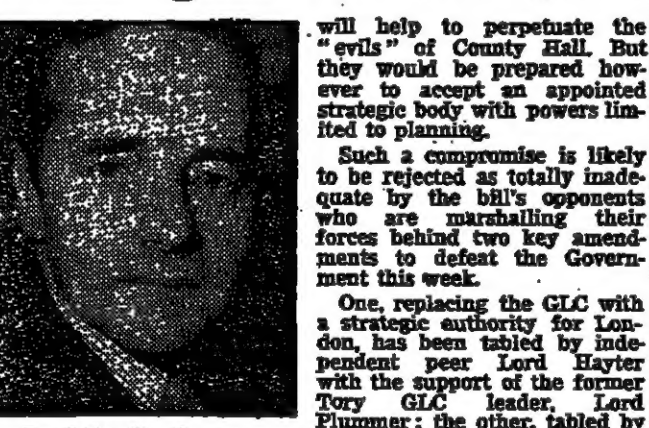

This would enable it to be introduced at a later stage.

The amendment tabled by Lord Sandford, president of the Association of District Councils, would give statutory status to the standing conference on strategic planning for London and the South-east which he chairs.

It is understood that ministers may seek to offer the option if the Government is defeated on the central issue of an elected strategic authority for the capital to replace the Greater London Council facing abolition with the six metropolitan authorities.

Ministers have made it clear that if they are defeated in the Lords, they will insist on the decision being reversed in the Commons.

They will not allow an elected body to replace the GLC, because they believe it

Lord Sandford — no pressure for vote will help to perpetuate the "evils" of County Hall. But they would be prepared however to accept an appointed strategic body with powers limited to planning.

Such a compromise is likely to be rejected as totally inadequate by the bill's opponents who are marshalling their forces behind two key amendments to defeat the Government this week.

One, replacing the GLC with a strategic authority for London, has been tabled by independent peer Lord Hylton with the support of the former Tory GLC leader, Lord Plummer; the other, tabled by four Tory peers led by Lord Mollison would replace the metropolitan counties with county-wide authorities.

The measure's opponents privately accuse the Government of unprecedented "arm twisting" of Tory supporters to avoid a defeat, but believe they have a chance of victory.

Today's televised debate is likely to concentrate on an Opposition demand for an inquiry before the bill's abolition powers are implemented.

Missile on a trail of destruction

By a Correspondent

A ROGUE guided missile brought panic and destruction to a peaceful neighbourhood when treasure hunters tried to cut it up.

The five ft six in. ground-to-air rocket was triggered when the two men who found it on an old weapons range in Essex tried to drill it open.

It exploded, careered out of a garage, smashed through four garden fences, demolished two concrete posts before burying itself three feet deep in a back garden in the next street. No-one was hurt but damage is expected to run into hundreds of pounds.

An Essex police spokesman said the men discovered the 1950s practice missile while they were exploring on Broadwell marshes, a former weapons testing range on the coast. It had no warhead but was still full of rocket fuel and they took it to their home in Stamford-Hope.

A spark triggered it into action as they set to work with their drill.

"It may have seemed amusing but it was an incredibly stupid thing to do. Someone could easily have been killed," said the spokesman. "Both men have been interviewed and charged with theft and causing damage."

Army bomb disposal experts later dug up the rocket and took it away for examination.

Joseph faces court over closure

By Susan Tibbitt

A group of rightwing educationists, including the Conservative peer Baroness Cox, is taking legal action against the Education Secretary for failing to provide adequate choice of state schooling. Their case against Sir Keith Joseph follows the Sex Discrimination Act, concerns the planned closure of a boys' school in Bristol.

Avon education authority plans to close the 1,000 pupil Merrywood boys' school in September 1986. The nearby Merrywood girls' school, originally a grammar school, would remain open.

Pace, the Parental Alliance for Choice in Education argues that the closure discriminates unfairly against boys.

They are seeking a judicial review in the High Court of the administrative decision to close the school, arguing that Sir Keith Joseph is in breach of the 1944 Education Act by failing to provide adequate choice.

Launched formally last week in the House of Lords, the group claims to represent parents in eight areas of England who are fighting to keep open state schools, most of them small, selective and single sex.

Koran scholars bring Saudis to book

By Martyn Halsall, Churches Correspondent

A lingering theological dispute over a translation of the Koran, denied to devout pilgrims on the way to Mecca, will come to a head after 70 years in Wembley on Sunday.

Leading Islamic scholars from around the world will address an expected audience of up to 3,000 at the inner sanctum of the faith's ultimate authority. In lay language, the scholars will argue their collective wisdom has been hijacked by a minority sect supported by petrodollars.

The dispute has divided world Islam. The conference, said the World Islamic Mission in London "has been called in response to urgent demands from various parts of the world."

The mission claims that religious righteousness in Saudi Arabia has been appropriated by the Wahabi sect, representing fewer than 2 per cent of the world's 700 million Muslims. Scholars from India, Pakistan, Morocco, Kuwait and Tunisia will address a conference anxious to refute the non-theological argument that "what the Saudis say goes."

Since 1982, according to the mission, the Saudi Arabian government has banned the Urdu translation of the Koran by the revered Indian scholar, Allama Rashid-ul-Quran, Ahmed Raza Khan Barailvi, whose grandson will be among the conference's speakers.

Another speaker, a Birmingham businessman, Mr Mohamed Ghani Siddiqui, said pilgrims arriving at Jeddah en route to Mecca had their Urdu translations seized.

Pilgrims had also been prevented from visiting the prophet's birthplace and forbidden to celebrate his birthday — Milad-ul-Nabi — by the sect,

Brick smash

Several youths were helping police with inquiries after a brick thrown from an M5 motorway bridge near Exeter smashed the windscreen of a coach yesterday.

Aged 'should exercise'

By Penny Cheek

Elderly people should get out and take more exercise, according to several specialists writing in the newly launched magazine New Age, published by Age Concern, which is out today.

Many elderly people who suffer from stiff joints and a lack of stamina do so not because they are old, but simply because they are not taking enough exercise, says Professor Peter Feist, of the Queen's Medical Centre, Belfast.

In the report, which is aimed at people who work with the elderly, he says often the people who are looking after the old are to blame for discouraging them from being more active.

"Our natural instinct is to protect the old at every turn and to do everything for them," he says, adding that while safety and reducing risk is important, "against this we must balance the greater danger to health of inactivity."

Last week, at a special one-day conference on the needs of the elderly, another Irish professor made a plea to doctors to cut down on the number of drugs prescribed to elderly patients.

Kevin O'Malley, professor of clinical pharmacology at the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, Dublin, said that the older people get, the slower their ability to metabolise drugs, with the result that medicines tend to stay in the body for longer periods until they can be disposed of.

He also tried to dispel the popular myth that elderly people were forgetful when it came to taking their medicine. His own research studies had shown on the contrary, that the elderly were very careful.

Minister bridges church gulf

From Bob Rodwell in Belfast

About 70 members of his Presbyterian congregation followed the Reverend David Armstrong across the road into the Roman Catholic church of the King at Lismavady, County Londonderry, yesterday when he went to bid farewell to the town's Roman Catholics before he leaves Northern Ireland with his wife and children on Wednesday.

Many members of both congregations were in tears as they said goodbye to the 37-year-old clergyman whose ecclesiastical gestures and close friendship with the neighbouring Catholic priest, Father Kevin Mullin, brought opposition from a small group of church-elders as well as verbal and physical abuse.

Now the majority of the congregation of the First Lismavady Presbyterian Church have signed a petition calling on the elders to quit and some church officers have resigned in protest at what they see as Mr Armstrong's banishment.

The petition is to be discussed at a presbytery meeting on May 7 and if the elders who oppose Mr Armstrong do not resign it will be taken to the next general assembly of the church, one of the organisers said.

Mr Armstrong is moving to Oxford with his wife and children for a six-month course before ordination into the Anglican Church and a post at St Aldate's, in Oxford.

He had been at Lismavady for less than two years and first aroused the opposition of elders when he visited the Catholic church opposite at Christmas 1983 to exchange greetings and to invite Father Mullin into his church.

The two clergymen repeated their visits last Christmas Day when there were scenes involving demonstrators from the neighbouring Free Presbyterian Church.

Abuse and harassment aimed particularly at Mrs Armstrong and her children came to a peak last month when Mr Armstrong and Father Mullin visited the United States together to take part in a St Patrick's Day parade in Boston and make speeches on the theme of reconciliation.

All of the 300 seats in the Presbyterian church were filled yesterday for Mr Armstrong's last service. "There were only 30 regular worshippers when he first arrived," said caretaker, Mrs Philomena Dickson, one of those who has resigned in protest, saying that many people were "heartbroken" at his departure.

Mr Armstrong — across the road

'Freezing Guides' inquiry

The Girl Guides Association is to set up an inquiry into why Guides attending a parade on Saturday were not allowed to put on warm clothing when the temperature fell nearly to freezing.

About 50 of the 20,000 girls taking part were taken to hospital at Thornton Heath, south London, suffering from the cold, and a dozen were kept in overnight.

The parade, at Crystal Palace, which also had a freak snowfall, was to mark the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Girl Guides.

The father of one of the girls, Mr Lawrence Phillips, said the girls were suffering from hypothermia.

A spokesman for the association said yesterday that its chief commissioner, Lady Baden-Powell, had ordered a full investigation.

Diplomatic law review

By Colin Brown Political Staff

The Foreign Office is seeking compulsory purchase powers to buy foreign embassy buildings and land in the wake of the Libyan People's Bureau siege.

Legislation under consideration may also enable the Government to rule out the establishment of embassies in sensitive areas.

The move is likely to be regarded suspiciously by the diplomatic community in Britain but it is apparently to be justified as the ending of a legal anomaly, exposed last year.

It was discovered then that the Government had no legal powers to take control of the building housing the bureau, even though it was unoccupied.

Foreign Office sources stress that the powers would be required in only extreme circumstances but officials appear convinced that they should be added to the proposals published in last week's white paper on diplomatic immunity.

These forebadowed the use of spot checks on diplomatic bags to prevent weapons being smuggled into Britain under diplomatic cover.

The Foreign Office has also warned embassy staff that from Wednesday it will be taking a tougher line against those who repeatedly flout parking laws.

A divided city that dares to speak its names

FEW issues in Northern Ireland, where both sides of the community cling to symbols of their respective identities, have caused harsher words or more anger than the name of the city on the River Foyle in the north-west of the province.

To Roman Catholics it is Derry, taken from the Gaelic for "place of oaks". To Protestants, it is Londonderry, which underlies the British connection and evokes memories of the way their forefathers defied the Jacobite army of James II during the siege of 1689.

Twelve months ago, the nationalist-controlled city council changed its name. The city's official name is Londonderry but now there is Derry City Council.

Unionists have boycotted the authority since the London prefix was and say they will demand the authority until the Government is forced into action, Paul Johnson reports.

Many people find it ironic that next month's local government elections will see the Unionists fighting on an abstentionist ticket while Sinn Féin, campaigning on a province-wide basis for the first time, will take its seats.

THE presence of Mr John Tierney (right) in the mayor's parlour, with its stained glass windows and wooden panelling, is a dramatic example of how much Derry has changed since the civil rights demonstrations of 1968.

At 32, unemployed and with an address in the Bogside, the scene of Bloody Sunday and of the most sustained and vicious violence of the troubles, he is hardly the archetypal first citizen.

But Derry is different. Where else, he asks, would a British Army patrol stop the black mayoral limousine, order the official occupant out at gunpoint, and then search the vehicle, presumably for weapons or explosives? That happened last year but the mayor is not complaining. "Why should I be different? It is just typical of the harassment suffered by all Roman Catholics in the name of security. Just because I am the mayor does not change the fact that I am a Catholic from the Bogside and that means a potential enemy to the army and the police."

He explains that the official name change from Londonderry to Derry by saying that most people in the city — 70 per cent are Catholic — wanted it that way. It would be better if the Unionists took their places in the council chamber but if they continue to refuse it will not matter that much. The authority will carry on and the changed name will stick.

Mr John Hume's Social Democratic and Labour Party is the largest grouping on the council and is certain to retain its primacy after polling day on May 15. The emergence of Sinn Féin has, however, sharpened and hardened the party.

Mr Tierney has consistently criticised the security forces, evidence of a sceptical attitude forged by boyhood in the Bogside and numerous arrests because, he says, he was young, Catholic and there.

The army shot dead five local IRA men without warning in two incidents at about the turn of the year.

"These young men — one was a 16-year-old schoolboy — were shot down like dogs," says the mayor. "They treated them like dogs, leaving the bodies for five hours within view of the television cameras. It sickened me and a lot of people around here."

Mr Tierney joined the SDLP partly because he rejects violence. Now he and his fellow councillors have to persuade the city's young Catholics that the ways of the IRA are morally wrong and politically bankrupt.

The SDLP has to convince voters in a city with 30 per cent unemployment, that it is building a better future. The new Foyle Bridge and a shopping centre development are signs that investment can be attracted.

Mr Tierney says the party has made an impact in other areas and pointed to the city crest, which features a skeleton. "They used to say that was a Roman Catholic waiting for a council house. But not now. I believe the Brits should get out, but not tomorrow morning. There should be a government announcement of a time limit, whether it be two years or five years, for the withdrawal of the troops. Negotiations could then start in earnest. A united Ireland is inevitable."

GREGORY Campbell (right), a member of the Northern Ireland Assembly and leader of the Democratic Unionists in Londonderry — as Protestants insist on calling the city — has emerged as one of the province's most outspoken politicians. "If English people realised what was going on in this city they would be astounded," he says.

Two young IRA men on their way to murder a member of the security forces were shot dead last December in the grounds of a local psychiatric hospital by an army undercover unit.

Mr Campbell was asked for his reaction. He felt as if Santa Claus had come early to Londonderry, he said. That sort of comment was always likely to be answered and within a week the reply was duly delivered.

The Irish National Liberation Army put a bomb under his car. The 32-year-old councillor, his wife and baby daughter are alive only because the device fell off and rolled into the gutter.

Now there is a television monitor outside his terrace home in the Waterside district overlooking the River Foyle. Inside, behind the bullet-proofed glass windows, his personal issue handgun rests in its holster on top of the bookcase containing volumes including A Pilgrim's Progress and the curiously entitled Secrets of Romanism.

"I'm told that the INLA are still watching and waiting but it is not going to deter me. In fact, as an Ulsterman through and through, it probably brings out a stubborn streak. It may be a terrible thing to say but you do get used to the threat. It's either that or the psychiatric hospital."

He still feels angry about the city council's change of name to Derry and says that the Democratic Unionists will, by their absence from the chamber, force the Government to act.

Earlier this year, the council was judged by the province's Fair Employment Agency to have discriminated against a Protestant who failed to gain promotion. An appeal is pending and the authority says it has nothing to hide but many Unionists regard the alteration to Derry and the discrimination case as symptomatic of a nationalist mood.

"You hear so much about Roman Catholic alienation. In Londonderry it is the Protestants who are alienated. The name change is typical of the triumphalism of the nationalists who discriminate against Protestants in many ways, such as housing and jobs."

Mr Campbell says that Londonderry is almost a divided city. He cites figures showing that in 1969 there were 13,000 Protestants living on the west bank of the city. Now there are 3,000. "Many of these people have been driven out by fear. The Protestant community feels isolated because of the activities of the nationalists."

The idea of sitting down in the council with Sinn Féin members who support the IRA and debating issues such as roads, lighting and bin collections, he finds ludicrous and offensive.

"Things have worsened in Londonderry over the past five or six years. It is a depressing thought but at the moment I cannot see any great reason for optimism. Thirty-six seats are being contested in the city. It is thought that the SDLP will take 14, the DUP seven, the Official Unionists four and Sinn Féin four or five.

ARE YOU AIMING HIGH ENOUGH?

A minimum investment of £500 gets you straight into an Abbey National Higher Interest Account. And right now you'll be hitting our highest rate ever of 10.25% net.

You can keep on adding to your account whenever you choose up to £250,000 (£500,000 for joint accounts).

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN INSTANT ACCESS?

You can enjoy instant access without penalty if £10,000 or more remains invested in the account after withdrawal.

Even with less than this amount remaining, you can still withdraw money instantly, but will lose the equivalent of 90 days' interest on the amount withdrawn.

However, there'll be no loss of interest at all if you give us 90 days' notice of withdrawal.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN MONTHLY INCOME?

We'll happily pay your interest monthly to any Abbey National account or into your bank account. Otherwise, your interest will be credited twice yearly to earn you an outstanding net Compounded Annual Rate of 10.51%. This works out to a gross equivalent of 15.02% for basic rate taxpayers. (Of course, rates may vary from time to time).

Call in at your nearest Abbey National branch to ask about a Higher Interest Account. Or complete the coupon below and post it to us.

You'll be well on target for our highest rate ever

Are you as happy with your building society?

ABBEE NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY, ABBEE HOUSE, BAKER STREET, LONDON NW1 6NL.

We would like: A. the interest added half-yearly to the Higher Interest Account ☐ B. to take advantage of the monthly income facility ☐ (tick appropriate box).

Full Name(s) Mr/Mrs/Miss _____
Address _____
Postcode _____ Tel. _____
Signature(s) _____
Date _____

10.25% = 10.51% = 15.02%

NET RATE: 10.25%
NET COMPOUNDED ANNUAL RATE WHEN HALF-YEARLY INTEREST REMAINS INVESTED
GROSS COMPOUNDED ANNUAL RATE TO BASIC RATE TAXPAYERS

ABBEE NATIONAL HIGHER INTEREST ACCOUNT

Introducing Quakers

a paperback by George H. Gorman

A comprehensive picture of the present-day Society of Friends in Britain, by a Quaker who explains Friends' beliefs and attitudes in a readable and interesting way.

Introducing Quakers will be sent free to readers sending this coupon.

To: Quaker Information Service (Q) Friends House, Bunton Road, London NW1 2JY

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Nature council rethinks tactics

By Sarah Tithart

The Nature Conservancy Council is reviewing prosecutions of landowners accused of damaging sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) after magistrates rejected two of three first three cases under the 1981 Wildlife and Countryside Act.

One prosecution of a Herefordshire farmer who allowed four acres of a species-rich meadow to be ploughed up fell this month because the council could not prove that the farmer had received papers notifying the land as an SSSI.

The land which included meadow saffron, a rare yellow crocus, cowslips and ox eye daisies, was used to grow swedes.

The council posted the papers once by first class mail and a second time by recorded delivery. However, the farmer's counsel convinced the magistrates at Kingston, Herefordshire, that there was no proof the farmer had received them.

He was not required to give evidence and was awarded costs of £1,437.

The council's second prosecution, of a Welsh farmer who allowed a 20-acre herb-rich wet meadow to be ploughed, failed on a technicality of the wording of NCC papers sent and received by the farmer.

Magistrates at Ceredigion ruled that the papers, inviting comments on designation of the land as an SSSI, should instead have asked for objections.

The only case which has succeeded was against a Leicester-shire farmer who admitted destroying plants on 20 acres of acidic grassland by applying lime and was fined £200.

His land included heath-spotted orchids, marsh violets and marsh arrow grass. The maximum fine, then £500, has been increased to £1,000.

A council spokesman said: "If we take anyone out to the site they can see it has been ploughed up and yet people can get away with it."

The council was rewriting its notification documents to point out the legal right to object to land being designated SSSIs and arranging for papers to be delivered personally to "awkward" landowners who might dispute they had received them through the post.

New powers for Police Complaints Authority

Stephen Cook reports on a system whose first job is to build public confidence in itself

THE Police Complaints Authority, the second attempt in the past 10 years to restore public confidence in the system of investigating complaints against the police, starts work today amid strong disagreements over its prospects.

The authority has the power of its predecessor, the Police Complaints Board of 1976, to review complaints and take issue with the police on whether there should be disciplinary charges against an officer.

But it will also have the duty to supervise in detail police conduct of all complaints involving death or serious injury — about 200 a year — and the discretion to supervise any case where it thinks the public interest is involved.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act, which establishes the authority also requires all police forces to set up a system for the informal resolution of lesser complaints by bringing together the people concerned to explain themselves. Conciliation is expected to be useful in the 3,000 annual complaints about police incivility.

The Government believes that the authority, intended to be independent and to have a high public profile, will provide a "fair and workable" system.

But Labour and the Liberals point out that the new system is complex, and that the police will still be investigating themselves. They are sceptical about the authority, gaining public confidence.

The Police Federation, which represents officers below superintendent, says it is "ambivalent" about the authority.

It will not silence the critics calling for an independent corps of investigators, says Mr Tony Judge, the federation spokesman, and the federation itself would prefer an independent system. Many high-ranking officers say privately that an independent system is bound to come.

The federation welcomes a new provision allowing officers to be legally represented at hearings where they risk dismissal, demotion, or compulsory resignation, but is unhappy that the federation will have to pay the lawyer, even if the charge is dismissed. Chairman of the authority is Sir Cecil Clothier, former parliamentary ombudsman, and the two vice-chairmen are Mr Roland Moyle, a former Labour health minister, and Rear-Admiral John Bell.

The 10 full-time authority members include lawyers, a black community relations specialist, administrators, and personnel managers. A leaflet explaining the new system is available from police stations.

Prompted by criticism that it is ignorant of police procedures, the authority has appointed Mr Frank Gutsell, former deputy chief constable of South Yorkshire, as full-time police adviser. A superintendent is being sought to help him.

The authority will have 48 staff and its own premises; the complaints board had 36 staff, and used a government building.

Sir Cyril Phillips, chairman of the outgoing board, welcomes the creation of the authority because of what he calls its "high status, independence, and potentially interventionist role." In a recent article he wrote that it "comes close to achieving that necessary yet intricate balance between gaining the confidence of the public and acceptance by the police service."

Mr Paul Boateng, chairman of the Greater London Council police committee, says that the authority is "grossly inadequate in powers and resources" and that "nothing short of a totally independent system is going to meet the current crisis in public confidence".

Number of sex offences falling

By Malcolm Dean

The Howard League says in a report by a working party today that fewer than one out of every 150 offences recorded by the police was a sex offence.

It points out that the number of sex offences had decreased by 20 per cent in the last 10 years compared with an increase of 80 per cent for non-sexual violent offences.

The penal reform organisation's working party, which included a magistrate, prison governor, four doctors, and a

ONE third of all serious crime involves the theft of a vehicle or property inside it, according to a briefing paper published today by the national Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (Nacro).

In 1982 some 350,000 motor vehicles were stolen and another 450,000 thefts from vehicles recorded. Of the people arrested for these crimes, 97 per cent were male. Three-quarters of those convicted were under 21.

prison psychologist, says that the present sex laws need to be made simpler, fairer, and more consistent.

Courts should base their decisions on whether an offender has used force, fraud, or undue influence.

The report says: "Sexual offences involving violence should be dealt with like any other offences of violence against the person, for which there is already adequate provision."

Legal protection against sexual exploitation from 16 to 18 years of age it suggests, "because of the vulnerability of young people to sexual pressures and coercion."

People in positions of authority over young people (such as parents, guardians, teachers, employers, or youth workers), or who are seven or more years older than the young persons concerned, would be liable to prosecution.

Offences of public indecency should be dealt with in a uniform manner regardless of the gender of the people involved.

The working party suggests that adult sex parties in private houses or private clubs should not be a concern of the criminal law unless carried out in a place which could cause offence to the public.

It notes that many sex offenders are non-violent, and respond to supervision and treatment it warns, however, about the danger of being too optimistic about therapy. Every effort should be made to explain the nature and prospect of treatment to offenders.

Almost half of all sex offenders are under 30, and once convicted the great majority never appear before a court again.

Of the 475,000 people found guilty of serious offences in 1982, some 6,600 were convicted of sex crimes. One third were convicted of indecent assault on females and one fifth for indecency between males. There were 400 people convicted of rape, 100 for incest, and 22 for buggery.

Unlawful Sex, report of a Howard League working party, published by Waterson, £9.95.

Deborah Lester-George, a model, at an auction of theatrical ephemera in Shaftesbury yesterday with a rubber skeleton which fetched £35. Picture by Frank Martin

Pupils get YTS pay plea

By Andrew Mearns, Education Staff

All 16- to 18-year-olds staying on at school or college should be allowed £1,000 a year, a Liberal inquiry report proposes today.

The scheme, to provide 700,000 young people with a term-time educational allowance, would cost £735 million a year. But that would be cut by nearly £280 million by savings on child benefit and discretionary maintenance grants.

A discussion document on student financial support proposes that 16- to 18-year-olds in full-time education should receive allowances at the rate fixed for YTS trainees, now £26.25 for each working week.

It would be paid to each pupil or student rather than to their parents.

The report says that there should be no tuition fees for students over 18 and that support should be based solely on a student's needs. They would receive the same basic educational allowance, plus payments to meet housing, travel and course costs. It estimates that the net expenditure would be £209 million a year.

Mr Clement Freud, Liberal education spokesman, said the proposals could end "the unfairness and waste" caused through young people being unable to meet the cost of further education.

Sixteen Years and Then... Student Financial Support. Available from L. Whitehall Place, London, SW1.

Critics blame lack of 'teeth'

By Stephen Cook

Many police officers fear that powers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act will be weakened because of excessive restrictions and safeguards.

As police forces round the country start a training programme to prepare for the introduction of the act, some senior officers and police representative bodies are casting serious doubt on the value of the legislation.

The main provisions of the act, due to come into force on January 1, 1986, extend the police power of stop and search countrywide, increase the maximum time for detention without charge, allow for police road checks and extend powers of search for evidence.

Miscellaneous provisions, including the establishment of police-community consultative groups and a more independent police complaints authority, are already in force or will come into effect shortly.

While the measure was being debated in Parliament its main opponents said that it extended police powers too far.

But Mr Tony Judge, a spokesman for the Police Federation, which represents ranks below Superintendent, said the amendments had produced "a bureaucratic nightmare." It was "a tragic, missed opportunity to standardise, and make sense the criminal law."

Sir Philip Knights, the recently retired Chief Constable of the West Midlands, said during a recent lecture that the act was a brave attempt at simple and clearly defined powers.

"But I shudder at the thought of the red herrings which 80 pages of detailed instructions on how to use its powers make available to the defence."

Sir Philip Knights "red herring"

Mr Judge said: "General police opinion is that the act is not going to be a major benefit in policing on the streets."

"The stop and search power, for example, is now so closely defined that an officer can't even ask somebody to remove his hat—that's hardly a weapon for the police in the fight against crime."

Michael Zander, professor of law at the London School of Economics, has recently visited several police forces to lecture on the act.

"They are now beginning to see the problems where before they saw only the advantages," he said.

A Home Office spokeswoman said that the codes of practice governing implementation of the act had just been finalised.

The intention was to lay them before Parliament within a month, and to stick to January next year as the starting date. Every police officer is expected to have 15 hours training about the act before then.

Air Canada makes flying fun for people who don't fly for fun.

With space, quiet and service. Or champers and balloons. You choose. To Canada. U.S.A. The Caribbean. Europe. India. Singapore. See your travel agent for details.

Flights so good, you won't want to get off!

AIR CANADA

AUSTIN ROVER

Leather upholstery.

Walnut door trims (front and rear).

An atmosphere of refinement and comfort unequalled by any other car in its class.

Taut, fuel-injected 2 litre engine performance that will get your mind, and your pulse, racing.

Just a taste of what you can expect from the new, very special Austin Montego.

The Montego Vanden Plas EFi.

A luxurious high-performer in the shape of the ideal family car.

The Montego Vanden Plas EFi. For the real family man.

Like all Montegos (there are ten saloons and six estates) the Vanden Plas EFi boasts exceptional interior space along with sleek good looks.

The five speed EFi also notches up some very impressive performance figures.

Like 0-60 in 9.3 seconds.

And a top speed of 113 mph.*

Whilst at the same time sharing another Montego characteristic: outstanding fuel economy.

(For example 49.6 mpg at a constant 56 mph.)

The new Montego Vanden Plas EFi.

Sleek and spacious.

Responsive and refined.

AUSTIN MONTEGO
From Austin Rover

*Prices range from the 1.3 saloon at £8,985 to the VP EFi saloon at £9,577. Estates start from the 1.6 at £8,948 to the VP EFi at £10,220. *Manufacturer's data. D.O.T. Figs: Montego 2.0 Vanden Plas EFi simulated urban cycle 29.2 mpg/8.7L per 100km. Constant 56 mph 49.6 mpg/5.7L per 100km. Constant 75 mph 37.6 mpg/7.5L per 100km. Prices correct at time of going to press excl. number plates and delivery. Nationwide car rental reservations through British Car Rentals. Tel: 0203 77223. Austin Rover Tax-Free sales information Tel: 021-476 2101 Ext. 220.

Reagan 'still wants summit'

From our Correspondent in Washington

President Reagan was still eager to meet the Russian leader, Mr Mikhail Gorbachev, despite public disputes with Moscow about arms reductions and the Major Nicholson affair, the White House said yesterday.

The latest summit speculation came as the State Department disputed Mr Gorbachev's account of the recent Geneva talks on strategic weapons systems. It said that, contrary to reported remarks by Mr Gorbachev in Warsaw, the Russians had offered no fresh strategic reductions in Geneva and, indeed, had not even resubmitted their proposals from the previous round of arms talks.

A State Department spokesman said that the US negotiators had broad authority to negotiate reductions and if the Russians gave their team the same, "then progress could be made" towards substantial bilateral cuts in weapons systems.

In a television interview yesterday the White House Chief of Staff, Mr Donald Regan,

THE Soviet Communist Party newspaper, Pravda, said yesterday that the British Government had defied elementary logic by expelling Soviet diplomats last week and that it still desired better relations with Moscow. The paper said that the further course of bilateral relations depended primarily on London.—Reuter.

He said it was still President Reagan's hope to meet Mr Gorbachev and that the "two of them will get together in New York" although Washington had yet to receive a formal reply to Mr Reagan's repeated offers of a summit meeting.

Relations between the superpowers have looked strained during the past few days as they have continued to bicker about the shooting of Major Nicholson in East Germany late last month.

President Reagan, in an interview with European correspondents released at the weekend, said that the Russians had "missed an opportunity to achieve some stature in the world by not admitting that this (the Nicholson shooting) was a most regrettable thing and a tragic thing."

Mr Reagan, however, appeared as anxious as ever, in his interview, to meet the new Russian leader. He said he would be "very willing" to meet Mr Gorbachev at the UN in New York.

Congressional resolution 'an insult to German soldiers'

Bitburg row threatens US links with Bonn

From Alex Brummer in Washington

The White House and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany yesterday reaffirmed their determination to go ahead with a ceremony of reconciliation at the Bitburg cemetery despite signs that the gesture will overwhelm the Bonn economic summit and cast a long-term cloud on US-German relations.

In ugly exchanges on American television yesterday, the West German deputy foreign minister, Dr Alois Maier, described a congressional resolution calling for the visit to be cancelled as "an insult" to the German soldiers who fought in the Second World War and suggested that Americans be "Nazified".

But Senator Arlen Specter, went a step further, arguing that Congress might well cut the number of US troops stationed in West Germany unless Bonn spared President Reagan further embarrassment and called off the cemetery visit. Such a move would hit at the heart of the Nato Alliance.

Despite the threat that Bitburg will disrupt President Reagan's 10-day visit to Europe which begins tomorrow, his Chief of Staff, Mr Donald Regan, said that the cemetery trip would go ahead "as it was part of a state visit". It had to be seen as part of an overall visit which would stress economic cooperation in the Western Alliance and include halts in Spain and Portugal.

The determination to press ahead was also confirmed by Dr Maier, who was appearing on the same television programme. He said he had just spoken to Chancellor Kohl.

Mr Reagan acknowledged, however, that the Bitburg visit would be brief—14 to 15 minutes at most—compared to more than an hour which the President intends to spend at the Bergen-Belsen death camp. This stop was hastily arranged after the Bitburg row broke.

The increasingly bitter debate about the visit is unlikely to be calmed by a New York Times investigation of the 48 Waffen-SS graves at Bitburg. According to the newspaper report, the SS division interred at Bitburg was responsible for one of the worst massacres of the Second World War. The massacre occurred at the French town of Oradour-sur-

Glance on June 10, 1944, when the 2nd Waffen Panzer division gunned down and burned 642 villagers, in.

The lingering public debate engendered by the Bitburg visit has left Mr Reagan "wounded in the heart" on the eve of his European trip, according to Mr Regan. "It will leave a scar," he told CBS televisually. "He is wounded internally."

Mr Reagan, who has refused public comment on Bitburg, has been hurt by what has been said about his insensitivity when he is a very sensitive person. But Mr Regan said that it was not a scar "on his ability" to lead the country.

The White House stressed President Reagan's staunch support of Israel and his recent role in assisting the Ethiopian Jews to Israel as signs of the President's commitment to the Jewish cause.

It is clear, however, that the White House misjudged the political effect that its efforts at reconciliation with Germany would produce. The House of Representatives is expected to pass a similar resolution to that in the Senate which opposed the visit, before the President's departure for Europe.

Senator Specter maintained yesterday that there was ample reason for Mr Reagan to cancel the visit—not least of which the public doubts which have been expressed by the mayor of Bitburg.

There was no spirit of political reconciliation in the remarks yesterday of Dr Maier whose constituency includes the cemetery at the centre of the furore. He said that the uproar in the US "was upsetting the German people" because of its "tendency to portray the impression that the German people were a Nazi people." He considered the congressional reaction "an insult to all former German soldiers of the Second World War."

In an effort to obscure such strong feelings, the White House is expected to urge leaders of the big seven industrial countries to produce a political statement on VE Day, emphasising the spirit of economic and political cooperation since the Second World War.

Mr Reagan will attend the summit in a weakened position unless Congress acts this week to pass the budget agreement between the White House and Senate Republicans.

Paying homage: The French President, Mr François Mitterrand, enters the Struthof concentration camp

Old boys pay the castle a return visit

W. L. Webb reports on an anniversary journey to Colditz

IT IS not every day you hear shouts of Sieg Heil! and alternate choruses of Lili Marlene and Walzing Matilda echoing from the Gaststätte Waldschloss, in a small town in East Germany.

This particular town, however, is called Colditz, the wartime site of the "post-graduate" camp for allied officers who had escaped from other Nazi prisoner-of-war camps—the "bad boys" of the Germans called it.

At the weekend, as part of their celebration of the fourth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, East Germany welcomed back to the old school 25 Colditz old boys, many of whom, in their 60s and 70s, proved to be almost as much of a handful as they were to Hauptmann Püppe and Lieutenant Eggers in their salad days.

The mayor and Herr Schreiber, the regional secretary of the coordinating organisation here, known as the National Front, looked even more bemused than their counterparts in the town of Torgau when the Americans returned to the Elbe a few days ago.

From below, Colditz looks like nothing so much as Anthony Hope's Zenda, or even, on the cold grey day of the visit, like the little town of Kafka's Castle.

Now it is partly a psychiatric hospital, and otherwise one of Europe's most daunting old people's homes.

The "old boys" were driven from the new Japanese-built hotel in Leipzig, through the Soviet garrison town of Grimma, and then suddenly they were back, the far from staid merchant bankers, grand landowners, whisky salesmen, and retired linen merchants, remembering the station where they had arrived in two's and three's to be marched up to the castle by guards with rifles ready at the duck-shooting position.

Among the visitors was the Emsworthian figure of Lord Newborough—alias Micky Wynne, taken in the St Nazaire raid, the bemused ex-marine David Hunter, a very bad boy indeed, though not so naughty as the camp's most creative and noisy diversionist, Peter Tunstall, now an actor working in South Africa, who held the record of 415 days' solitary confinement.

They were disappointed that they could not get into their former quarters, now occupied by the sick and aged. Reluctantly, they went on to speeches in the Festsaal, where the famous Ballet Noun-sense had its premier during which Airey Neave made his escape.

The real hero of the day, the one person in Colditz everyone wanted to greet and buy drinks for, was the tiny perky 32-year-old Willy Pöhlert, the camp electrician they used to see almost every day, whose tools they pinched remorselessly, and who was once brilliantly impersonated in an escape attempt by an equally short French cavalryman.

When Colditz was relieved, the British tried unsuccessfully to take their respected galler, Captain Püppe, back to England with them. There was a moment on Saturday when it looked almost as if a respected 82-year-old citizen of Colditz was going to be kidnapped.

Fire hospital chief detained by police

From Jeremy Morgan in Santiago

The director of St Emilian psychiatric hospital, Mr Omar de la Azar, and another man unofficially described as the administrator, were in police custody yesterday, as investigations continued into the fire at the hospital in which at least 78 people died. Police gave no indication whether charges would be filed.

News that the two men were being held came after allegations about the design of the building, and the way the hospital was run.

The death toll from the fire may move into three figures, according to state looking after injured at other hospitals. Firemen who fought the blaze on Saturday say they took 61 blistered and blackened bodies out of the building, but later police estimates put the dead at 78 and the injured at 247.

Hospital records are rumoured to have been destroyed, but sources say that 413 patients were inside the six-storey building when it caught fire on Friday night. Many of the patients were old as well as infirm, and a doctor suggested over the weekend that some of those now in hospital with serious burns would not survive.

Many who escaped the flames were choked by toxic fumes from plastic foams used to pad the walls of some wards, and some hurt themselves trying to break down locked doors or leaping out of the windows.

Witnesses at the scene, on the outskirts of Buenos Aires, said that not all the victims were patients. One nurse reportedly killed herself by jumping from the fifth floor, although she tried to use a mattress cushion her fall.

No official explanation has yet been given as to how the fire started, probably on the third or the fourth floor, or why it spread so rapidly in a building which went into service less than five years ago.

The disaster is the worst ever at a mental hospital in Argentina, and the mounting death-toll lends weight to the public's long-running complaint about the standard of health care.

Chilean Socialists held

From Malcolm Coad in Santiago

More than 280 people were still being held yesterday after police raided a concert held by opposition groups to celebrate the 52nd anniversary of the foundation of Chile's banned Socialist party.

The raid took place on Friday night, but yesterday lawyers had still been able to see the detainees, many of whom spent the night of their arrest in an open yard.

The concert was an attempt by one of the Socialist party's three factions to get round President Pinochet's ban on political meetings.

day night, but yesterday lawyers had still been able to see the detainees, many of whom spent the night of their arrest in an open yard.

The concert was an attempt by one of the Socialist party's three factions to get round President Pinochet's ban on political meetings.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Ortega seeks aid in Russia

PRESIDENT Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua arrived in Moscow yesterday on the first leg of an East European tour to seek economic aid. Tass said the Soviet Politburo member Mr Gorbachev met Mr Ortega and other Nicaraguan officials at the airport.

Mr Ortega said before leaving Managua for an eight-country tour that he was seeking aid "for the life of the Nicaraguan people" rather than military support from Communist allies.—Reuter.

Pole dismissed

A SENIOR Solidarity activist who discussed human rights with the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, this month has been dismissed from the Polish Academy of Sciences, opposition sources said yesterday. Professor Bronislaw Geremek, aged 53, an internationally-reputed historian and mediator who had worked at the academy for 30 years, was informed of his dismissal on Friday.—Reuter.

Soviet amnesty

The Soviet Government has announced an amnesty for certain gaoled citizens as the fortieth anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany approaches. The amnesty excludes people convicted of more than a dozen offences under the criminal code of the Russian Republic on which the other 14 Soviet republics base their laws. The offences include rape, violating public order, running whorehouses, and all types of political crime.—Reuter.

Budapest pub

AN English-style "pub" complete with dartboard and piano will open in Budapest the next few days under Hungary's economic reforms, which encourage private enterprise. Office workers and other potential customers thronged the pub, called the Frigate, during a trial opening, draught and bottled West German lager, brewed under licence at a Hungarian brewery, will be served.—Reuter.

$66m deal

BANGLADESH and the Soviet Union signed a new annual barter trade protocol yesterday with a projected total turnover of goods worth $66.4 million, the Commerce Ministry said in Dhaka. The Ministry said the size of the new protocol, effective from July this year, will be $10.4 million more than the current one, due to expire at the end of June.—AP.

Malta truce

VATICAN officials and Maltese leaders have settled a disagreement about tuition at Roman Catholic schools, the Holy See announced yesterday. Secondary schooling is to be made free for certain groups, in response to government demands.—AP.

Troop cuts call

THE Spanish Foreign Minister, Mr Fernando Moran, was quoted at the weekend as saying that the Government would seek early talks to reduce the US military presence in Spain. The state news agency, EFE, quoted Mr Moran as saying: "Before the referendum on Nato, the Government will negotiate with the US on the reduction of its forces in Spain."—Reuter.

● Fernando Moran

SUN ALLIANCE FIREMARK HOME INSURANCE. THE SIGN OF TOTAL PEACE OF MIND.

The Sun Fire Office cast its first Firemark symbol in 1710. Now we've revived it in a unique all-embracing Home Insurance for the householder with more to protect than most.

Sun Alliance Firemark Home Insurance not only covers the contents of your home when in the home, but goes on protecting your property anywhere in the world for loss or damage. Jewellery, clothing, money, valuables, personal effects, luggage—in fact, replacement as new on all your belongings.

Having to replace everything would be an expensive business. That is why Sun Alliance Firemark Home Insurance begins at the £20,000 level—yet represents outstanding value for money.

Firemark is more than just an insurance policy, it's a quality service, including our surveyors' professional advice on security at no extra charge. What is more, if you do have to replace locks because the keys have been lost or stolen, that cost too, is covered by Firemark.

We even provide a special marker pen to help the police identify lost or stolen property if recovered. Ask your insurance broker to tell you about this very special policy, or complete and return the coupon to us—now. No stamp is required and we will send you full details by return of post.

To Sun Alliance Insurance Group, Firemark Home Insurance, DMD, FREEPOST, Horsham, West Sussex, RH12 1ZA. No stamp required. Please send me full information about Firemark Home Insurance, without obligation.

Name

Address

Postcode

My present policy expires on Personal service calls only on request. For immediate advice please include your daytime telephone number.

SUN ALLIANCE
HOME INSURANCE

1084

If you are looking for the right job here are some of the reasons why you should be at

JOB35 TECHNOLOGY35

8-11 May Wembley Conference Centre

• In one place at one time you'll meet a vast array of employers recruiting new personnel.

• You can discuss and compare hundreds of posts on offer within many different industries...

Computing, Engineering and High Technology companies looking for specialists and technical personnel from Technology 85 white companies in industries such as Recruiting, Leisure and Entertainment, Hotel and Catering, Industrial Security and Financial Services recruiting at all levels from job 85.

• You might learn about opportunities you've never even considered.

• You will meet employers in person allowing quick assessment of the positions they can offer.

• You should find not only the right job but the right company.

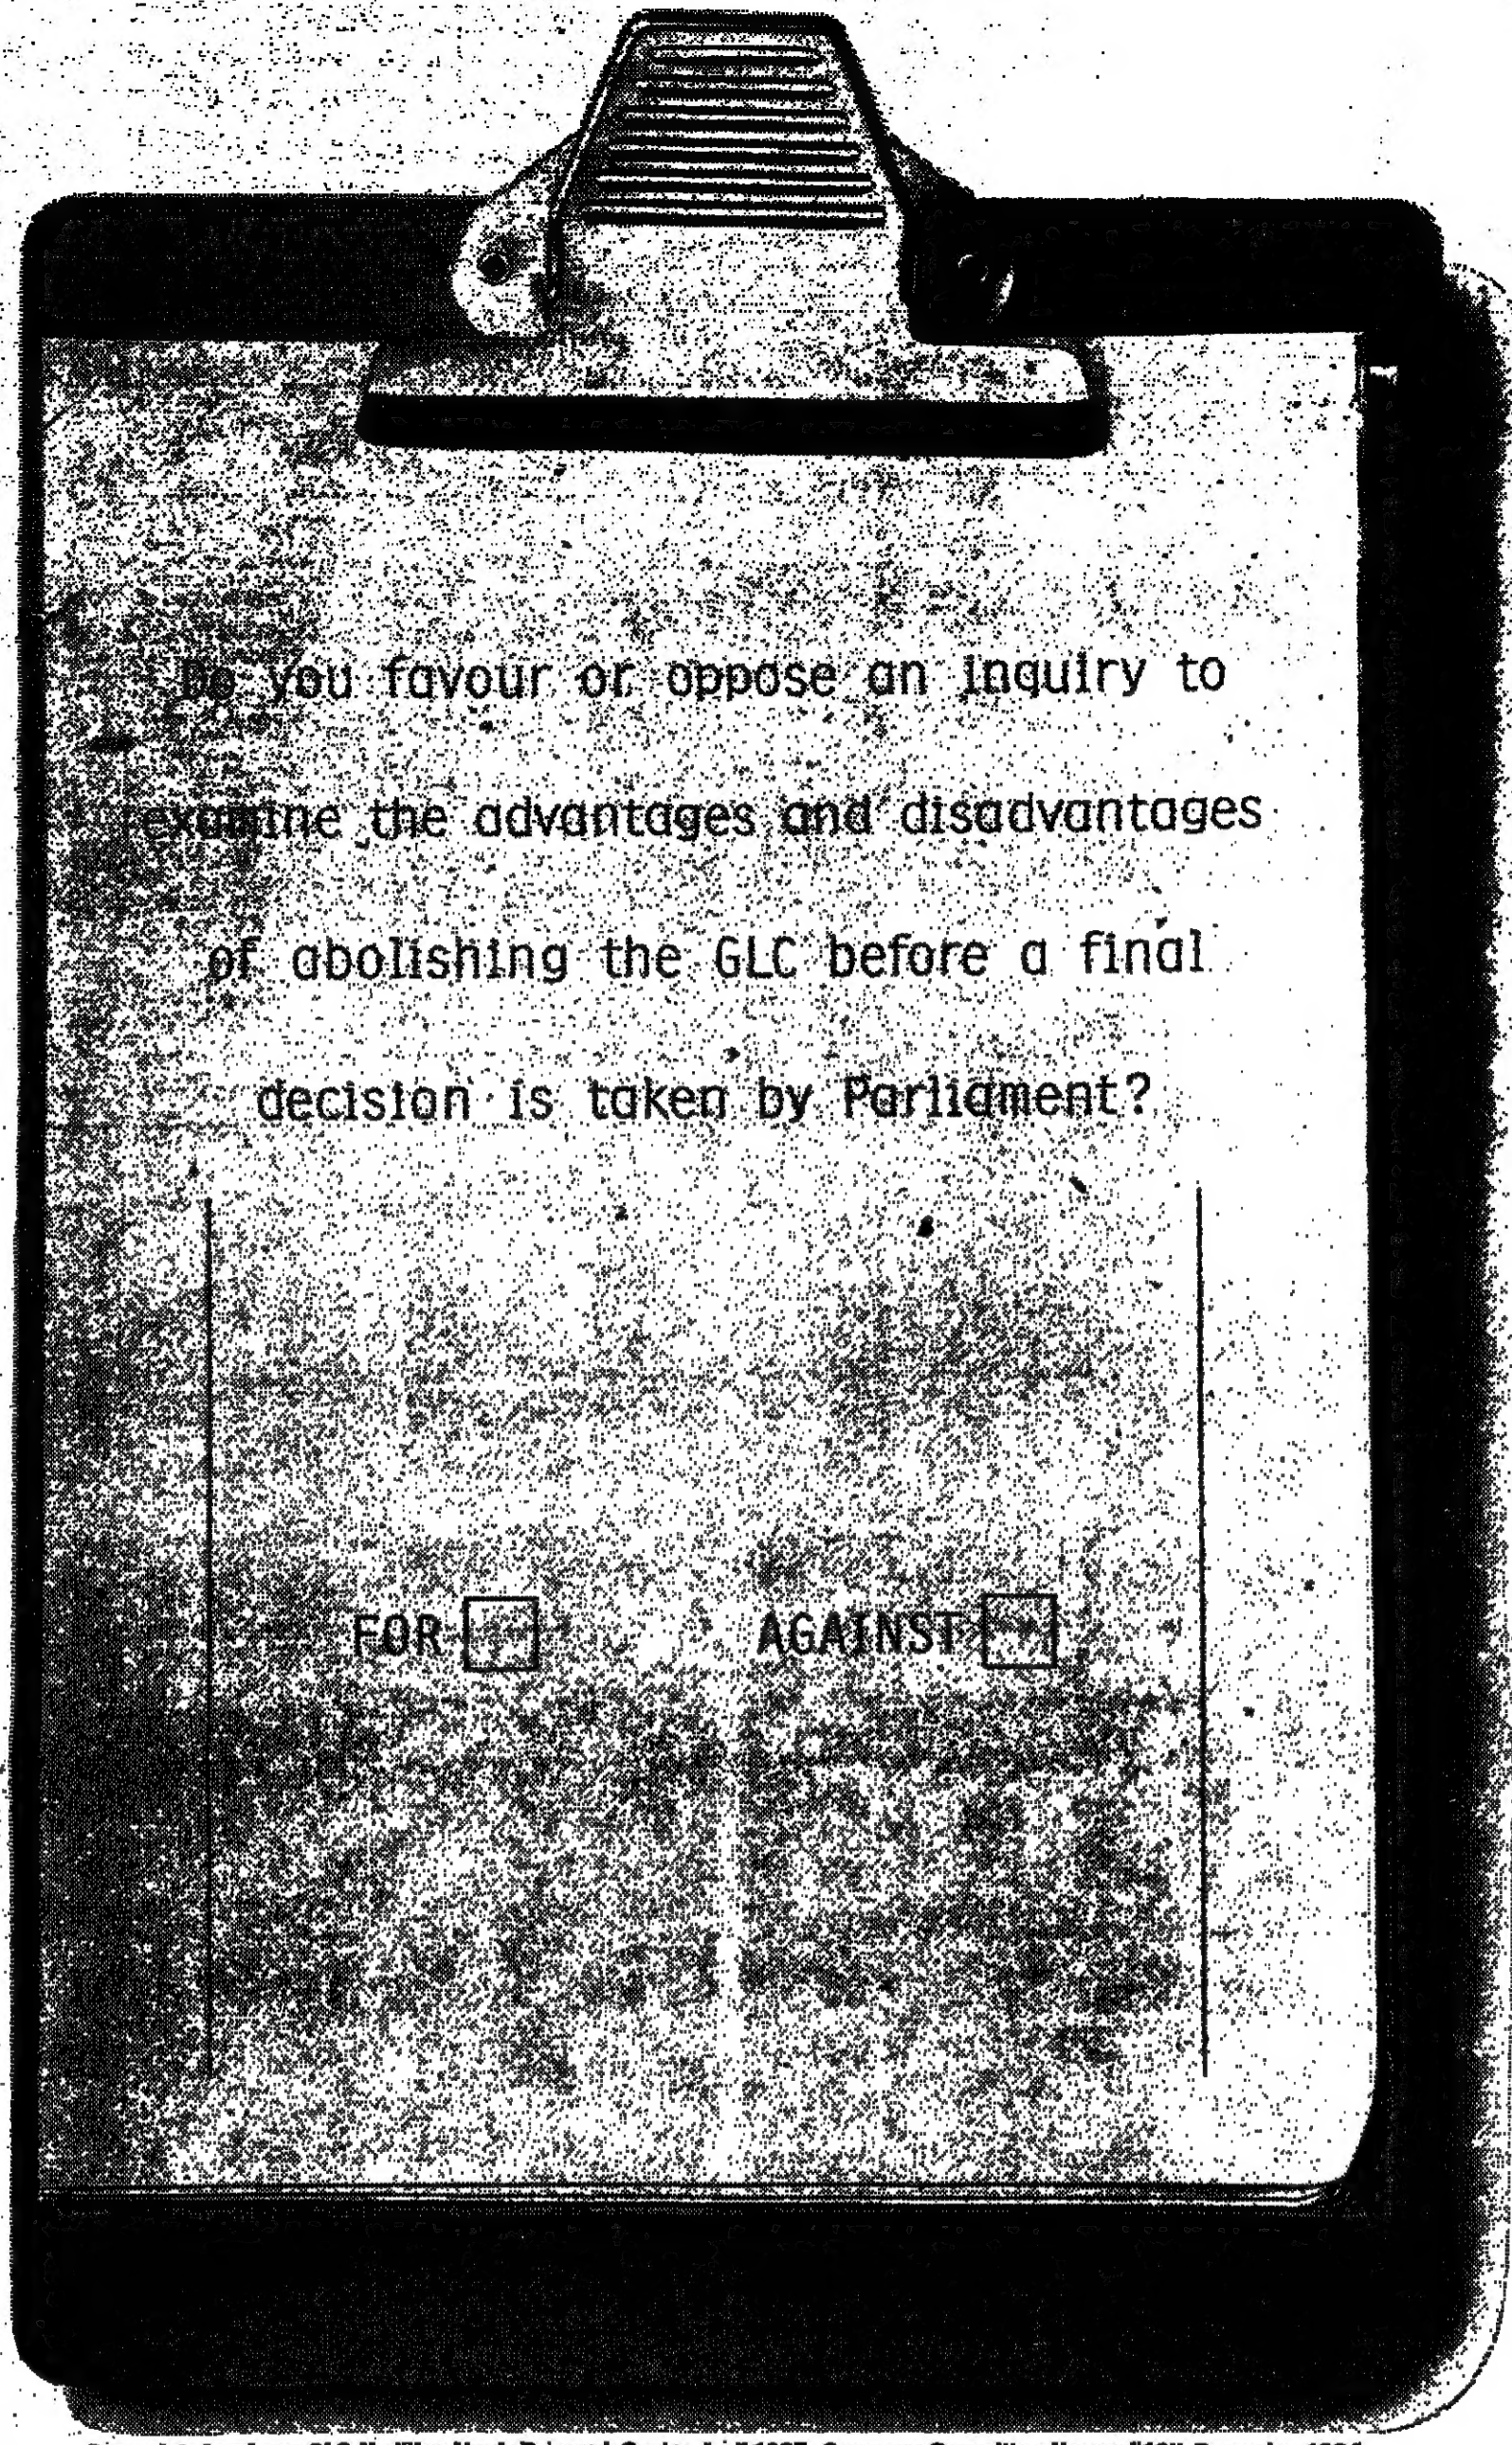

Entrance is FREE—so come and see for yourself, bring your CV and compare and investigate the opportunities open to YOU...

Open from Wednesday 8—Saturday 11 May at the Wembley Conference Centre London.

For more information contact

PROMOTIONS

46-47 PALL MALL LONDON SW1 0JL 01-839 6044

Survey into Inquiry on GLC Abolition. Harris Research Centre. April 1985. Commons Committee. Hansard 12th December 1984. The Government have refused every request for an inquiry in any shape or form.

77% OF LONDONERS TICKED THE BOX ON THE LEFT.

WHAT WILL THE ANSWER BE TODAY?

This afternoon, the House of Lords starts discussing the details of the Government's Abolition Bill.

A bill which if passed will have enormous implications for our capital city.

The seven million people who live here will all lose their right to vote in the GLC elections.

And London will be left without a single directly-elected authority to co-ordinate and plan.

Instead, the majority of London's services will be run by Government quangos and joint committees.

Which in turn will be controlled, along with the future administration of Inner London Education, by the Secretary of State.

There could be an inquiry to examine all the pros and cons before such a momentous decision is taken?

We think there should be.* So do 77% of Londoners.

Why doesn't the Government?

If they're right to abolish the GLC, wouldn't an inquiry prove them right?

*GLC ALL PARTY COMMITTEE DECISION.

Sign of the times: Heavily-armed Druze militiamen, atop a Soviet-made tank in Na'amah, celebrate the capture yesterday of Christian villages on the road to Sidon

Israel's Arabs find a champion

The bedouin Arabs in the Negev desert are looking to Ezer Weizman (right) for improved status and living conditions, Ian Black reports from Kuseifa village

EZER WEIZMAN grinned at the crowd of waiting Negev bedouin as he squatted in the low black tent before tucking into the greasy lamb and rice brought ceremoniously on giant metal trays for him and the other guests from Jerusalem. "Welcome, man of peace," said a Hebrew sign tacked to the carpets on the wall.

"I know you have great expectations," the Israeli Minister without Portfolio told the Arab tribesmen, "and that's why I don't want to promise too much in case next time I come here instead of eating lamb you'll be eating me."

Mr Weizman has a blunt and earthy way of charming audiences, and his fans like him so much that he can get away with humour that borders on the uncouth. "It's a bit embarrassing, really," he told one bearded and venerable sheikh from a village near Gaza (without a trace of embarrassment), "but I remember bombing an Egyptian tank column down there in June 1948. And now I drink coffee with Hosni Mubarak."

Mr Weizman visited this remote bedouin settlement earlier this month, the day after he returned from his controversial "private" talks in Cairo about the future of Egyptian-Israeli relations and the possibility of holding a summit conference between President Mubarak and Mr Shimon Peres, the Israeli Prime Minister.

In their different ways both events showed that if there is anyone in the national unity government in Jerusalem who can build bridges between the Jewish state and its Arab subjects and neighbours, it is the former fighter pilot and hawkish general turned "dove" who is committed to peace and co-existence.

Since becoming the first Israeli cabinet minister with special responsibility for the affairs of the country's 17 per cent Arab minority, Mr Weizman has started to streamline relevant government bureaucracy and has promised to work for the full integration of the Arab population in all areas of national life.

The bedouin who hosted him in Kuseifa for a traditional feast are a small but significant part of his constituency. Unlike the more sophisticated Arabs in cities like Haifa and Nazareth and in the villages of Galilee, the Negev tribesmen are considered loyal to the Jewish State, serving in the police and in a special minority unit in the army, where their prowess as scouts and trackers in border areas is especially valued.

The process of radicalisation that has swept the rest of the Israeli Arab community — Palestines left behind after the great exodus of 1948 — has left the bedouin largely untouched, although land expropriations, the activities of the "Green Patrols" in protecting state lands, and a general sense of discrimination have left their mark.

"I respect the State of Israel and I am proud to be one of its citizens, but I feel that I am treated with contempt," said Sheikh Ibrahim al-Amur, the leader of one of the bedouin tribes evacuated to Kuseifa from nearby Tel Mahate. Their land was taken to build a military airfield to replace one lost when Sinai was returned to the Egyptians after the peace treaty.

The Bedouin here, who have no electricity, phones, or even a proper sewerage system, believe there is room for comparisons between the conditions they live in and the vast sums paid in compensation to Jewish settlers evacuated from the city of Yamit, south of the

Tehran council steps up Islamic penalties

TEHRAN: Five thieves have each had one of their hands chopped off and Iranian courts have ordered two adulterers to be stoned to death under Islamic law.

A member and spokesman of the Supreme Judicial Council, Mr Mortaza Moqaddasi, said that 169 "illegitimate" acts such as fornication and one man was sentenced to death for sodomy in a nine-month period to last January.

Iran introduced Islamic law and punishment for some crimes two years ago and is gradually extending the system. The invention of an electric guillotine for chopping off the hands of thieves was announced recently.

Mr Moqaddasi said that 19 murderers were executed after relatives of the victims insisted on gossas — part of Islamic law based on the principle of an eye for an eye.

Relatives, who can commute the death sentence to payment of "blood money," decided against executions in 51 cases. — Reuters.

Shultz to discuss possibility of PLO representation

Egypt sees positive signs in peace tour

From Kathryn Davies in Cairo

The US assistant secretary of state for foreign affairs, Mr Richard Murphy, left Cairo for Washington yesterday at the end of a two-week tour of the Middle East which apparently failed to make much progress in reviving the peace process.

However, Egyptian leaders, including President Hosni Mubarak, denied that Mr Murphy's shuttle diplomacy was the failure portrayed by the PRESIDENT Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria arrived in Damascus yesterday for talks with President Assad and other Syrian leaders. He said that Israel should withdraw from all occupied territories and that a Palestinian state be set up. — Reuters.

Israelis at the weekend. An Israeli spokesman had reported Mr Murphy as saying that Syria remained implacably opposed to negotiations with Israel in the occupied territories.

President Mubarak said that a permanent settlement of the Palestinian issues was "a complicated business," while Egypt's Foreign Minister, Dr Esmat Abdel Meguid, cautioned against expecting "anything spectacular or quick."

Egyptian officials confirmed that the Secretary of State, Mr George Shultz, was expected in Cairo after his visit to Israel on May 10. Talks will centre on the key issue of possible PLO representation in any joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation which would meet the Americans and ultimately talk to Israel.

Mr Shultz said in Washington last week that the United States would never talk to the PLO unless it recognised Israel's right to exist within secure borders. PLO spokesmen, including the chairman, Mr Yasser Arafat, insist that any joint delegation must include their members.

American and Egyptian officials, in consultation with Jordan, are compiling a list of Palestinians who might be acceptable to all the parties to the talks. These include Palestinians with American passports, as well as community leaders in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip who are not PLO officials.

Members of the Palestine National Council, the Palestinian parliament-in-exile, could be included in the list.

President Mubarak has reported that the Egyptian ambassador to Israel will not return to Tel Aviv until the Taba issue is resolved. Israel says it has obtained material from British archives as part of its campaign to retain sovereignty of this tiny strip of beach on the Sinai coast, south of Elilat, but has given no details.

The Egyptians say that the return of Taba is a question of national honour and they want the matter referred to independent arbitration. At the same time, Egyptian newspapers have been told to tone down their anti-Israeli comments and cartoons, which, the Israelis say, amount to anti-semitism and are a violation of the Camp David accords.

Algiers shaken by riots in the Kasbah

From David Bradshaw in Algiers

Riot police, armed with tear gas and water cannon, faced hundreds of demonstrators in Algiers' old quarter, the Kasbah, at the weekend.

The demonstrators were protesting against poor living conditions in the Kasbah, which is overcrowded and decaying. Prolonged water shortages are frequent.

Such demonstrations are rare in Algeria which has so far managed to avoid the social unrest which has affected its neighbours, Morocco and Tunisia, early last year. Agitation in the Kasbah began when a neglected building collapsed, reportedly killing two people.

On Friday night several hundred people marched out of the Kasbah into the central city to converge on the headquarters of the ruling FLN Party. Riot police pushed the crowd back to the Kasbah, but were unable to manoeuvre in its narrow streets and alleyways, where disturbances continued late into the night.

Fires were lit and considerable damage done to buildings and parked cars. Scores of people were injured, but no deaths have been reported.

Calm returned to the quarter on Saturday, but riot police have been deployed in large numbers each evening to deter further disturbances.

The unrest is believed to be the most serious since the French departure 23 years ago. One of the Government's fears was that its opponents, such as Islamic fundamentalists, might take advantage of the unrest to further their own ends. More than 100 fundamentalists are on trial in the town of Medea.

The local press said that the disturbances had been provoked and manipulated by "agitators," whose real aims had nothing to do with the problem of housing.

Kasbah dwellers still harbour a sense of anger and frustration about the Government's slowness to improve living conditions and rehouse the worst-off families. The Government has already emptied part of the Kasbah and resettled its inhabitants, but their places have been taken by newcomers from the countryside.

Unofficial sources said that the riots could give urgency to government plans to empty and demolish most of the Kasbah's ancient tenements, thus solving a social and a security problem.

EXCLUSIVE

Serious investors with £10,000 or more can now earn 10.25% equal to a compounded annual rate of 10.65% - 15.21%^{GROSS EQUIVALENT}

Halifax Premium Xtra.

The world's No 1 building society is providing a rare opportunity for serious investors.

A new high-interest account which guarantees a full 2% premium over our variable basic rate for a full three years.

It's called Premium Xtra. And the minimum investment is £10,000.

As you can see, it pays a remarkably rewarding rate of interest — currently 10.25% net equal to a gross equivalent of 14.64%. But that's only half the story.

Compounded four times a year.

Compounded annual rates assuming that full quarterly interest remains invested.	10.25% NET 14.64% GROSS EQUIVALENT*
---	--

Most other building society accounts pay interest half-yearly.

With Premium Xtra, we have doubled that.

So four times every year, for three years, your interest is added to your capital, and begins earning interest on itself.

At current rates, that brings your return up to a compounded annual rate of 10.65% net, which is equal to a gross equivalent of 15.21%.

Monthly Income.

Premium Xtra gives you the opportunity to convert your interest into a regular monthly income.

We'll pay it automatically every month into your Halifax Paid-Up Share or Cash account or your bank account.

And we'll do it absolutely free of charge.

Easy access. Passbook simplicity.

If you wish to withdraw some of your capital from time to time, we've made it simple.

Just give 90 days' written notice of your intent, and the money's yours without penalty.

And even if you choose instant access, you only lose 90 days' interest on the amount withdrawn.

Premium Xtra comes complete with a passbook. So whether you're taking money out, or paying it in, you will always know where you stand.

Strictly Limited Issue.

This highly attractive investment is only available on a strictly limited issue basis. So if you wish to take advantage of the excellent return offered by Premium Xtra, we urge you to fill in the coupon and open an account now.

And remember from April 6th there is absolutely no limit on the amount you can invest.

There's never been a better time to get a little Xtra help with the future.

Halifax Premium Xtra.

To: Halifax Building Society, (Ref IKW), Freeport, Trinity Road, Halifax HX1 2BR. (No stamp required.)

I/We enclose cheque, no. _____ for £ _____ (min. investment £10,000). To be invested in a Halifax Premium Xtra Account.

I/We would like the interest to be:

☐ added to the balance ☐ paid monthly.

FULLNAME(S) _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

SIGNATURE(S) _____ DATE _____

HALIFAX THE WORLD'S NO 1

*THE GROSS EQUIVALENT RATES QUOTED APPLY TO BASIC RATE TAXPAYERS. ALL INTEREST RATES QUOTED ARE VARIABLE WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE 2% PREMIUM WHICH IS GUARANTEED. HALIFAX BUILDING SOCIETY, TRINITY ROAD, HALIFAX HX1 2BR.

150 000 000

Sudan border ploy puts squeeze on rebels

From Jonathan Steele in Khartoum

Sudan is prepared to consider stopping relief food and other supplies from crossing the border into Ethiopia in return for a halt in Ethiopian aid to the rebel army fighting inside Sudan.

The offer is believed to be high on the agenda of the Sudanese military mission which was received by the Ethiopian leader, Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, in Addis Ababa at the weekend.

According to senior officials, the new Sudanese military

THE Sudanese Defence Minister, Brigadier Osman Abdullah Mohammed, said yesterday that Libya had promised to stop aiding rebels in southern Sudan. — Reuters.

Government's first priority is to get the rebel leader, Colonel John Garang, to the negotiating table. The colonel leads the Sudanese People's Liberation Army which has crippled economic development in the oil-rich south for two years.

Colonel Garang has been backed financially by Libya and logistically by Ethiopia. The new military ruler here, General Abdel Rahman Swareddahab, is now confronting Colonel Garang politically.

A decree of the former president, Ja'afar Numeiri, which divided the south and was unpopular, has been cancelled. General Swareddahab has also appointed three anti-Garang ministers to the Cabinet. The aim is to try to remove the grievances on which Colonel Garang's revolt is based while signalling that the rebel leader cannot expect to see his sympathisers in the Cabinet unless the war ends.

Diplomatic moves: Colonel Mengistu (left), General Swareddahab (centre) and Colonel Gafaty

On the diplomatic front, the Sudanese leader hopes to undercut Colonel Garang by persuading his foreign backers to reduce their support. Sudan reopened diplomatic relations last week with Libya, and as a goodwill gesture asked the National Salvation Front, a group opposed to Colonel

Muhammad Gafaty, to leave Sudan. This was a relatively easy step since the bad relations between the two countries were largely based on personal animosity between

Colonel Gafaty and Mr. Ethiopian support for Colonel

Garang. Colonel Garang has refused repeated offers from General Swareddahab to come to Khartoum for talks. To put pressure on the new military Government, his rebel radio has claimed that he has secret contacts with dissident junior officers in Sudan who have formed a "free officers' movement".

EPLF and TPLF representatives are worried by the threat, although they say it would not affect their military operations as these do not depend on foreign military aid. An end to cross-border food supplies would only affect starving civilians, they say. But cross-border feeding has become deeply embroiled in the intense propaganda war which surrounds the relief effort in Ethiopia. The US which is the main source of money for Eritrean and Tigre relief, has highlighted the issue as a way of arguing that the Government in Ethiopia is not in control of parts of its own country. Cross-border operations clearly violate the sovereignty of independent countries.

If the Sudanese Government were to stop them, it would be a blow to the EPLF and TPLF, and a diplomatic setback for Washington.

Company denies using gas to flush out blacks

Sacked S. African gold miners refuse to leave lodgings

From Patrick Laurence in Johannesburg

Union officials said yesterday that miners had locked themselves into hostels at the world's largest gold mine, where 13,000 black workers were sacked at the weekend, and were refusing to leave.

But the owners of the huge Vaal Reefs gold mine complex, 95 miles south of Johannesburg, denied charges by the officials that teargas had been used to flush out the miners.

The miners were dismissed after calling what the Anglo-American Corporation described as an "illegal strike" on Friday and Saturday.

The men refused to go underground, an Anglo-American spokesman said. The refusal and the subsequent dismissal came after several weeks of "work stoppages, incitement and intimidation," according to a company statement.

The spokesman strongly denied unconfirmed reports that police used teargas and rubber bullets to drive the dismissed miners into their hostels and then sealed off the exits. He also rejected a report that a miner had suffocated to death after teargas had been fired.

"There are no police on the mine and no tear smoke or rubber bullets have been fired," he said. "Mine security personnel are however, keeping an eye on the situation. No miner has been prevented from leaving the hostels, except perhaps by intimidators."

The sacked miners account for only slightly more than a quarter of the total number of SOUTH Africa's ruling National Party faces a test of white opinion on Wednesday in by-elections in the Orange Free State and riot-torn Cape province.

Analysts expect a strong showing from the extreme right-wing Conservative party, which is mustering support from whites who oppose what they see as the recent erosion of apartheid policies by the government. — Reuters.

black miners at Vaal Reefs. But a company spokesman said that the interrupted production caused by dismissal of 13,000 would cost about 25 million rand ($10.4 million).

The National Union of Mineworkers, South Africa's biggest trade union for black miners, said that the dispute at Vaal Reefs was part of a wider dispute with Anglo-American triggered by miners, who are paid daily, objecting to a 10 per cent salary rise awarded to monthly-paid workers.

The NUM has declared a dispute with Vaal Reefs management and requested the appointment of a conciliation board, according to local labour law. The Minister of Manpower has 30 days in which to appoint a conciliation board to try to settle the dispute. If he fails to do so, the union can embark on a legal strike.

The miners' dismissal follows the sacking of 2,000 miners at Hartbeestfontein mine on Friday. Another 2,000 black miners at Hartbeestfontein were dismissed at the weekend.

A miner died at Hartbeestfontein after impaling himself as he jumped over a fence when violence broke out on Friday.

The dismissal of the 13,000 Vaal Reefs miners, which received scant coverage in the local press yesterday, comes at a time of continuing unrest in

Australia N-party walkout

From Richard Yallop in Melbourne

The future of Australia's fledgling Nuclear Disarmament party was thrown into doubt at the weekend when its three best-known members walked out of the inaugural national conference to protest at the influence exerted within the organisation by the extreme-left Socialist Workers' party.

The NDP made a considerable impression on last December's federal election, drawing away from the Labour Party many members who were disillusioned by the pragmatic line of the Prime Minister, Mr. Bob Hawke.

Its three most prominent figures, Ms. Jo Valentine, who was elected to the Senate to represent Western Australia, Mr. Peter Costello, a singer, who stands for the Senate in New South Wales, and Mrs. Jean Melzer, the Victorian candidate, quit the national conference in Melbourne at the weekend.

Ms Valentine did not resign from the NDP, but said she now wished to be known as the "Senator for nuclear disarmament," without reference to her party. She said she could not properly represent people concerned about nuclear disarmament if she was being dictated to and dominated by members of another political party.

She said that the national secretary of the Socialist Workers' Party, Mr. Jim Percy, was "calling the shots" at the conference, and the party had to be cleansed of the SWP's influence. Mr Percy refused to comment.

Her claim that 80 of the 200 NDP members attending the conference walked out with her was denied by party organisers, who said no more than 35 people had left the meeting.

The NDP chairman, Mr. Michael Denborough, said about 12 SWP members were active in the party.

He said that Ms Valentine's claims were "McCarthyism of the worst order." SWP members, who had worked hard for the NDP, were being singled out because of their long hair and unusual dress.

Labour Party sources said that the SWP was committed to a revolutionary state, and that its members were known for their fanaticism and their tactics of infiltrating larger political organisations by establishing small cells within them.

Mr Fraser, in a letter to Australia, Mr. Malcolm Fraser, warned of Soviet expansion in the Pacific and accused neighbouring New Zealand of undermining security there.

Mr Fraser, in a letter to a meeting of former government leaders said Moscow was trying to increase its presence in the Pacific and would soon have a military base at Auckland.

Mr Fraser said that the former British colony of Gilbert and Ellice Islands, which gained independence in July, 1979.

Malcolm Fraser, warning for the Pacific

Nigerian rioting kills 100

BAUCHI, Nigeria: A dusk to dawn curfew has been imposed on the northern Nigerian town of Gbame, the scene of religious rioting that has left more than 100 dead.

The Bauchi state government said in a statement that anyone breaking the curfew would be treated as a religious fanatic and shot on sight.

Fighting started on Friday between police and members of the banned Maitatsine Islamic sect and there was more shooting on Saturday.

Yesterday, however, calm returned. One hundred and forty-six suspected members of the sect were arrested, 30 of whom were charged with rioting, arson and other offences.

There was no word on the fate of Eniola Adams, the sect's leader in Gbame.

The sect was set up in the 1970s by a Moslem cleric in Nigeria's north. In the past five years for which members of the Maitatsine sect have been blamed.

Adams led six force units put down disturbances in 1980 in the city of Kano in which thousands died. Hundreds more died in rioting two years later in Katsina, and Kaduna. There was another outbreak of religious rioting in Yola last year.

The sect's founder, Mohammed Marwa, a Cameroonian preacher also known as Maitatsine, died in the Kano riots.

Marwa's followers, who have in the past armed themselves with machetes, knives and axes, are aggressively opposed to many aspects of modern life and some regard Marwa, and not Mohammed, as the true prophet of Allah.

After Marwa's death, there were reports that copies of the Koran had been found in his home in Kano with Mohammed's name crossed out and Maitatsine inserted.

The sect's beliefs are alien to orthodox Muslims. The ruling Supreme Military Council is dominated by Muslims from the north but Nigeria, with its large Christian population, is a secular state and the authorities have clamped down hard on the Maitatsine sect. — Reuters.

Army 'still in Angola'

LISBON: South African military units still inside southern Angola and strung out along the border with Namibia are provoking tension 12 days after the South African Government announced the disengagement of its forces, the Angolan News Agency said at the weekend.

Regular South African army units were stationed along the border with South Africa in the province of Cunene and large contingents of anti-guerrilla fighters, cavalry and police were in positions along the border with South African-controlled Namibia, the agency said.

The report said that the positioning of the military units was causing "great tension" in southern Cunene.

On April 15 it was announced that South Africa would disengage its forces from southern Angola in the hope of encouraging the Angolan Government to take steps towards the withdrawal of an estimated 25,000 Cuban troops. — AP.

How many more bank statements before you cut your losses?

I'd like free banking
(For keeping my personal current account in credit)

Name _____

Address _____

Take this coupon to your most convenient Midland branch and we'll do the rest.

Midland The Listening Bank

GU/29.4

HALLEY'S COMET was seen with intense observation by the world's largest telescopes last winter as it moved westwards in the northern part of Orion on its way to perihelion on February 9, next year. Achievements include the first detection of the comet at infrared wavelengths, made by a team of British observers using the UK Infrared Telescope at Mauna Kea in Hawaii last December 20, and the first visual sighting secured by the American observer Stephen O'Meara using a 24-inch telescope at the same volcano-top observatory on January 22. Spectra of the comet's nucleus obtained using the 4.5-metre Multiple Mirror Telescope in Arizona in February show evidence of cyanogen, a common constituent of comets.

In the last few days Halley's Comet has moved north-eastwards into Taurus where it is a sixteenth or seventeenth magnitude object 6 degrees east of Aldebaran, and some 730 million km from the Earth, on May 1. After conjunction on the far side of the Sun on June 11, it reappears in the summer morning sky and returns briefly to Orion where most amateur astronomers may catch their first telescopic view between August and October.

Particulates from Halley's Comet are responsible for the annual Eta-Aquarids meteor shower which lasts from April 24 to May 20, peaking on May 5 when meteors stream from the eastern morning sky. As part of the observing campaign for Halley's Comet, amateur astronomers will pay special attention to the shower this year, even though moonlight will interfere with meteor counts and the shower is best viewed from the southern hemisphere.

Eclipses

The total eclipse of the Moon on the evening of May 4, is the first of two to be visible from

THE NIGHT SKY: May, 1985

The maps show Saturn and the brighter stars as they appear at 01.00 BST on May 1, midnight on May 15 and 23.00 on May 31.

Halley in view by Alan Pickup

Britain this year the other is on October 20. The total phase of the eclipse, when the Moon lies completely within the northern half of the central dark umbra shadow of the Earth, lasts from 20.22 to 21.31 BST, and it is during the first half of this period that the Moon rises and the Sun sets for most areas in Britain. Only for observers east of a line from the Wash to the Isle of Wight does moonrise occur before 20.22. Following totality, the Moon gradually emerges from the umbra until 22.36, and it is free of the outer penumbral shadow by 23.33.

During the eclipse, the Moon lies about 10 degrees to the west (right) of Saturn and just west of the double star Zubenelgenubi in Libra. It also lies uncomfortably close to the horizon in the bright evening twilight as viewed from Edinburgh. It stands only four degrees high in the south-east when totality ends, though it is another four degrees higher as seen from London.

The Moon's umbral shadow dips to within 400 km of the Siberian forest on May 15, producing a partial solar eclipse visible from the north-western Pacific, Japan and most areas north of 60 degrees north latitude. No eclipse will be seen from Britain.

The solar system

SATURN reaches opposition on May 15 when it lies directly opposite the Sun so that it rises in the east-south-east at sunset, stands about 20 degrees high in the south in the middle of the night, and sets in the west-south-west at sunrise. The planet is 1335 million km away at opposition and shines at magnitude 0.0, making it comparable with the three brightest stars visible at our map times: Arcturus in Bootes; Vega in Lyra and Capella in Auriga. Saturn can be seen eight degrees above-right of the moon on the evening of May 5. Its slow westwards motion in Libra (see south star map) carries it two degrees south of Gamma Librae (75 light years distant) on May 7, 0.1 degrees north of Zeta Librae (1500 light years) on May 10 and only one arc minute north of the star 34 Librae (420 light years) on May 22.

Mars sinks into the north-western evening twilight this month to end a spell of visibility which has lasted for almost two years. At present, it sets more than two hours after the Sun, but this interval shortens by two minutes each day as it approaches conjunction of the far side of the Sun in July. At magnitude 11.6, the planet moves eastwards in Taurus and passes 6 degrees north of the star Aldebaran, twice as bright as Mars and also orange-red, on May 11. By the time Mars stands

5 degrees below-right of the young Moon on the evening of May 31, it will be difficult to see in the twilight.

Uranus, a magnitude 5.5 binocular object in southern Ophiuchus, rises in the south-east one hour before our map times. Like Neptune, magnitude 7.9 in Sagittarius and rising in the south-east at the map times, it reaches opposition in June. Jupiter is a conspicuous morning object rising in the east-south-east a little more than two hours after our star map times and climbing to stand about 15 degrees above the south-south-eastern horizon at sunrise. It brightens from magnitude -2.3 to -2.5 as it moves eastwards between the stars Theta and Iota Capricorni. Jupiter is 738 million km from the Earth and has an apparent diameter of 40 arc seconds when it lies 6 degrees above-left of the Moon on the morning of May 11. Venus reaches its greatest brilliancy as a morning star on May 9 when it shines at magnitude -4.5, eight times brighter than Jupiter. It rises some 70 minutes before the Sun at present and stands 10 degrees high in the east at sunrise. By the end of May, Venus is 12 degrees high at sunrise, having risen 90 minutes earlier. Binoculars show the planet to be a brilliant crescent, shrinking in diameter from 45 to 28 arc seconds as its distance grows from 57 million to 91 million km. Mercury attains its greatest angular distance of 27 degrees west of the Sun on May 1, but lies too low in the bright morning twilight to be seen from our latitude this month.

The Moon occults the second magnitude star Delta Scorpii on the night of May 5-6. As seen from London, the star disappears behind the Moon's north-eastern limb at 00.42 and reappears at the north-western limb at 01.31. From Manchester the occultation lasts from 00.41 to 01.28, while the times for Edinburgh are 00.42 to 01.26.

Diary

All times are BST
May 1 16h Mercury at greatest elongation
May 4 21h Full Moon and total lunar eclipse
May 5 5h Aquarius shower
May 5 10h Saturn 3 deg N of Moon
May 6 01h Occultation of Delta Scorpii
May 7 02h Uranus 3 deg N of Moon
May 8 05h Neptune 5 deg N of Moon
May 9 14h Venus at greatest brilliancy
May 11 00h Jupiter 5 deg N of Moon
May 11 14h Mars 6 deg N of Moon
May 15 19h Moon at last quarter
May 15 19h Saturn at opposition
May 16 00h Venus 5 deg N of Moon
May 16 22h New Moon and partial solar eclipse
May 21 11h Mars 13 deg S of Moon
May 27 14h Moon at first quarter
Jun 1 22h Saturn 3 deg N of Moon

Four hurt as police shoot at mob setting fire to slum huts

Troops keep tight grip on tense cities in Gujarat

New Delhi: Troops patrolled three towns in India's western state of Gujarat yesterday to try to prevent further violent protests against a government policy of reserving jobs and college places for minorities.

Police said the state capital, Ahmedabad, was tense but peaceful, but troops and police were maintaining "vigorous" patrols.

The city has been the focal point of 11 days of riots in which at least 55 people have been killed.

Four people were injured yesterday in Surat, 140 miles south of Ahmedabad, when police fired on crowds setting fire to huts in a slum area of the city. Troops went into Surat on Saturday night after street violence erupted earlier in the day despite a curfew clamped on the city.

One woman wounded during the police shooting in Surat died yesterday of her injuries. All India radio reported.

A police spokesman said troops were also called out for the second time this week in Baroda, about 70 miles south-west of Ahmedabad. Dozens of policemen were injured during battles between stone-throwing crowds in Baroda, he said, and an Indian curfew was in force in several parts of the city. Three people were injured during clashes in a village near the city.

A curfew was also clamped on some parts of Anand, 40 miles south-east of Ahmedabad, after street battles between supporters and opponents of the reservation policy.

At least four policemen were injured when they were hit by flying stones, the spokesman said. Crowds set fire to two cinemas and several shops.

He said Indian police curfew on the old walled city area and two other districts of Ahmedabad was briefly relaxed yesterday to allow people to buy essential supplies. He said Kadi, Vimsagar and Viramgam and some parts of several other Gujarat towns were under curfew after stone throwing and arson attacks in the past two days.

In Champaner in the Punjab, a Sikh political leader freed from detention said yesterday that the Indian Government was waging a hate campaign against his sect.—Reuters.

Mayor stresses tie with Kampuchea

From John Gittings in Ho Chi Minh City

A close connection between the economies of Kampuchea and southern Vietnam was stressed yesterday by the mayor of Ho Chi Minh City, Mr Mai Chi Tho.

His remarks reflect the Vietnamese insistence that any political settlement in Kampuchea must not disturb the present relationship with Vietnam. Mr Tho, speaking to foreign journalists who are here for the tenth anniversary celebrations of the fall of Saigon, also said that state socialism could not be achieved at least before the end of the century.

The population of Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon), which reached a wartime highpoint of 4.5 million, is now almost up to four million, but there are still 100,000 unemployed.

There was a great potential for the city's industrial production, Mr Tho said, "not only in the southern provinces, but in Laos and Kampuchea." He pointed out that the Kampuchean capital was only 250 miles away, and that Ho Chi Minh City should develop to satisfy Kampuchea's needs. Mr Tho thought that industrial growth would follow development of offshore oil exploration.

He admitted that some members of the old administration were still held in "re-education" camps, but advanced the unusual argument that this was only necessary because of the new threat posed by China.

So far, only the main industries have been nationalised. More than half the labour force in smaller industry and commerce had been organised into various forms of co-operatives, but there was still an important private sector of small family interests.

Mr Tho repeated assurances of religious freedom in the south. Earlier yesterday, Mass was celebrated in the city cathedral. The priest explained that five masses are celebrated there in Cantonese and three in Vietnamese — and that his church is kept open by contributions from the faithful.

Exiles keep up protest

PEKING: Chinese demonstrators seeking an end to 17 years of enforced exile in the remote province of Shaanxi yesterday continued their protest outside Peking's municipal Communist Party headquarters for the seventh consecutive day.

The disillusioned protesters were reduced to a core of about 70 when they resumed their sit-in on the steps of the bleak, grey building yesterday.

They defiantly unfurled their large red banner demanding permission to return to live in Peking, but their number had dwindled from the several hundred who started the demonstration last Monday.

Chinese security police prevented foreign reporters from talking to the demonstrators.

The exiles vow they will stay on until they win, but while there have been no arrests reported so far, Western diplomats believe the authorities are unlikely to tolerate the city centre sit-in continuing until May 1, when Peking has invited foreign trade unions to Labour day festivities.—Reuters.

7 killed in Sri Lanka

Colombo: Seven soldiers were killed by a landmine while renewed Muslim-Tamil clashes erupted in Sri Lanka's north and eastern provinces yesterday, officials said.

The mine blew up one truck in a convoy, killing some occupants and injuring others at Karavaddi, 12 miles from the northern capital of Jaffna.

About 50 homes were set ablaze when fresh clashes broke out between Muslims and Tamils in the east coast town of Valachchenai.

Government officials said troops had been rushed to the area which was calm after the morning's violence. First reports said that 100 homes had been burned.

Security officials said that separatist guerrillas fighting to set up an independent state for the island's 2.5 million Tamil minority, were responsible for the mine blast.

Guerrillas, who killed one officer in an attack on a police post on Friday in the predominantly Sinhalese district of Kurunegala in the north-western province, have been accused of sparking the worst Muslim-Tamil riots in the eastern province.—Reuters.

Family finds its refuge in a bottle

LOS ANGELES: An American, Mrs Dorothy Peckham, was on a Christmas cruise to Hawaii in 1979 when she threw a wine bottle overboard containing her address, greetings, and a dollar for return postage.

At the weekend, a former South Vietnamese soldier, Bao Van Nguyen, and his family moved into a home in Los Angeles — the final chapter in the story of the bottle. Mr Nguyen, aged 31, said he picked up the bottle at sea — 9,000 miles from where it had been dropped — while he and 30 other Vietnamese "boat people" were making their way in a flimsy boat from Vietnam to Thailand.

After he settled in a refugee camp in Thailand, he sent a letter to Mrs Peckham and her husband, a Los Angeles lawyer, saying: "We have received a floating mailbox by a bottle... Now we send a message to the boss, and we wish that you will answer us sooner."

Mr Nguyen and the Peckhams exchanged letters and the couple decided to sponsor Mr Nguyen, his wife Joang Kim, their 18-month-old son, Thai, and Nguyen's 17-year-old brother to come to the United States.

The Vietnamese family finally arrived at Los Angeles airport on Saturday.

"It was a sixth sense that made me take the bottle from the water and now I have a good future," Mr Nguyen said.—Reuters.

When villains start working 9 to 5, so will we.

Like most other white collar workers, police officers work at least eight hours a day, five days a week.

18.10 HARROW: An old lady hasn't been seen for a few days and the milk is piling up on her doorstep. A Woman Police Constable breaks in and finds her dead on the floor. Foul play? The Inspector and Police Surgeon are called in.

There the similarity ends. In a place like London, accidents, football matches, demonstrations, crime, tourists, and the like keep us busy twenty four hours a day, seven days a week.

And since quite a lot of our work involves dealing with London's anti-social elements, anti-social hours are what we tend to work.

You could find yourself up well before the lark on Early Turn, 6am to 2pm.

Or you could be putting in a hard day's night while most law-abiding folk are comfortably parked in front of the television.

Look on the bright side, though. While everyone else is slaving away at work, you can spend an afternoon in the garden or at the squash club.

So much for routine. There's not much chance of anyone settling into a comfortable routine in the Metropolitan Police.

It's one of the few occupations where you can turn up for work and not have an inkling of what the day holds in store for you. You could be called to the scene of a fatal accident, or an armed robbery.

Or you could spend the afternoon in a community centre helping to sort out old people's problems.

Every day, you'll find yourself in situations that demand something different from you.

By turns, you'll be a tourist guide, marriage guidance counsellor, diplomat, child psychologist, criminologist, self defence expert, first aid specialist, lawyer and speaking clock.

Every one of these jobs requires different individual qualities.

23.04 FULHAM: A bomb reported in a shop doorway. Chief Inspector and C13, Anti-Terrorist Branch called out to assess the situation. The Explosives Officer confirms our worst suspicions were unfounded. Better safe than sorry.

You need them all to get into the Metropolitan Police Force.

First of all, you must be at least 168 cms tall if you're a woman and at least 172 cms if you're a man.

Ideally, the academic qualifications were looking for are around five good 'O' levels.

Nevertheless, people who've got a string of A levels won't get in if they don't possess all the right personal qualities. You'll need a lot of common sense, a genuine concern for people, a strong sense of fair play, an agile mind in a fit body and a well developed sense of humour.

And as these aren't the sort of things we can discern from an application form, you'll have to go through our two-day selection process.

A copper earns every penny. The pay is very good. Considering some of the things 03.15 SOHO: Two officers spot a man climbing the scaffolding outside an office block. He claims he's looking for his football. They offer to help him look and find all the signs of a break-in on the second floor. The phantom footballer gets booked.

we'll ask you to do for it, it has to be. At 18½ (our minimum age), the least you'll start on is £8,556, including London allowances.

If you're a bit more mature, you'll be better equipped to help us. So over 22's start on more.

As you gain experience and make progress in the Force, your salary will keep pace.

Although you can be sure the hours won't get any easier.

For further information, phone (01) 725 4575. Write to the Appointments Officer, Careers Information Centre, Dept. MD969, New Scotland Yard, London SW1H 0BG. Or visit us at our Careers Information Office in Victoria Street.

* These incidents are based on real events, but for legal reasons the locations have been changed.

The vanishing opportunity at Bonn

One trouble with this week's Bonn economic summit is that it is being held in Bonn. Memories of what happened at the last summit held in the West German capital in 1978, when the seven leading industrial nations adopted a policy of coordinated expansion, have haunted summitry ever since. At the 1978 summit West Germany pledged expansion measures equivalent to one per cent of gross domestic product, Japan proffered increased growth of 1.5 per cent, the US adopted a series of special measures and the other four chipped in with bespoke contributions of their own. Unlike some previous summits the top three delivered their promises. It was, arguably, the most successful economic initiative by the big powers since Bretton Woods. Until, that is, the second oil crisis broke out a few months later after the Iranian revolution, and plunged the world's economies into fresh convulsions.

There are, unhappily, no signs of a repeat performance this year. The United States, of course, wants Europe to adopt American supply-side policies to remove "rigidities" from their economies which, over a longer timescale, might produce some results. Italy and France have been muttering about Germany and the UK expanding their economies faster than otherwise through tax cuts. But Germany, with memories of 1978, is in no mood to respond, and the UK is predictably not interested in U-turns, even sensible ones. This summit is to be London and Williamsburg writ large. Less inflation, less protectionism (coupled with an early start to the next round of trade talks), continuation of the "case by case" approach to the international debt crisis, more emphasis on "structural adjustments" and a re-affirmation of democratic values by the summit seven (who fought four to three against each other in the last world war) on the eve of the VE-day celebrations.

What is the point—it is argued—in stimulating economies which are already enjoying sustained growth and which could receive a fresh kick from falling inflation and interest rates?

But this, alas is offering hostages to fortune. The annual inflation rate at 6.1 per cent has risen 86 per cent since the Thatcher low point of 3.7 per cent (May and June, 1983) and interest rates are much higher now than when the Prime Minister embarked on her fiscal squeeze in 1979 to bring them down. Not entirely her fault, of course, since world interest rates are largely governed by the US Government's ravenous appetite for foreign savings.

Practically everyone, including both houses of Congress, now firmly believe that the U.S. deficit must come down. What makes this summit different from others is that the rhetoric has a better chance of becoming reality.

A lower deficit would almost certainly be accompanied by lower real (after allowing for inflation) interest rates which would diminish the attractiveness of dollar investments to the international investing community and so cause the dollar to decline further relative to other currencies. This would, after a suitable time lag, restore much of the lost competitiveness of US industry and, hopefully, defuse the volcanic pressures for protectionism in America.

All of which ought to remind the rest of the world how much of the "sustained" growth it brags about is actually the result of the United States being turned, temporarily, into an importers' paradise.

So, this week in Bonn, instead of being a celebration of inertia, ought to be an opportunity for filling in the growth vacuum brought about by the long overdue "structural adjustments" taking place in the US.

Conditions are about as favourable as they are ever likely to be for an orchestrated refutation by Japan, West Germany and Britain. The risk of another explosion in oil prices (barring unforeseen circumstances) minimal. Most fears are based on a possible destabilising collapse which extra economic growth might fend off. The risks to inflation are also minimal because there is much underutilised capacity in Europe and, in any case, a falling dollar will reduce the cost of imported raw materials. US politicians often refer to Euro-sclerosis, implying that Continental economies are brimful of restrictive practices and subsidies. The real sclerosis may be in economic risk taking. What we really need now is a revival of the Bonn spirit of 1978 accompanied by a prayer that enlightenment might strike in the same place twice.

Counting the damage to civil liberties

Britain's need for an effective and credible civil liberties organisation has never been greater than it is today. Long vaunted freedoms of conscience, assembly and movement are under growing assault. Both by its rhetoric and by its actions, this government has done more than most to pen back these freedoms. So this weekend's annual conference of the National Council for Civil Liberties had a special responsibility to ensure a broad base for the defence of threatened rights. Such a task has never been easy and, on the whole, it has been the forces of the political right, not the left, which have done most to frustrate that aim.

Yet at the weekend it was the left which preferred to stay in its emotional corner. The conference voted through a series of motions which will inflict major damage on the NCCL's recent attempts to broaden its constituency and its credibility. In particular, it refused to countenance the interim report of its own inquiry into civil liberties and the miners' dispute which had examined not only the abuses perpetrated by the police and the courts but also the threats to civil liberty from unions and pickets. The more pragmatic leftwing activists in the NCCL—many of them people who have done far more for civil liberties than the council's knee-jerk critics on the right have ever done—are now trying to pass yesterday's decisions off as of relatively little importance. They are claiming that the NCCL's commitment to even-handedness is undiminished. But that is not how it will be seen from the outside.

From the outside it will be seen as a deliberate refusal to offend the trade unions. In defiance of the encouragingly open-minded post-strike mood elsewhere, in which the mistakes and abuses of the union's tactics are being coldly dissected, the NCCL conference effectively refused to look these lessons in the eye. As a result, the NCCL's inquiry team looks set to resign, the council's general secretary could go too, and the new all-party civil liberties group, which held its first meeting only last week, may be still-born.

Of course, the issues which divide the NCCL—like whether a union member has an untrammelled right to work during a strike or whether racist groups like the National Front are entitled to equal civil liberty treatment—are complex and difficult. But civil liberties are about the protection and enhancement of lawful diversity. NCCL is a damaged movement for failing to uphold that principle. And the defence of civil liberties, at a time when it is more than ever needed, is grievously wounded too.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Role call for teachers

Sir.—Teacher morale today is at an all-time low because at a time of rising standards, technological advance and greater professional commitment, we find ourselves treated with contempt by our employers. We very often work in dilapidated buildings which are not redecorated for years at a time.

When we ask for improved conditions, we are told that nothing can be done because the education budget has been used up on teachers' salaries. Let policemen finance their panda cars and soldiers their weapons!

As professionals, anxious to improve our classroom performance, we attend a great many courses during the year. Many of us run clubs in our spare time and all of us are involved in parent-teacher events. We are teachers, social workers, policemen and, in many cases, substitute parents. We do not complain of these roles but we do resent the fact that we are not given the respect or confidence we deserve.

At a time when we should be expanding our national resources at educating our children to take their place in the modern world, we are forced back into a rigid system of under-financed education. No wonder highly gifted young teachers are leaving the profession.

Shelia de Almaria

London, NW11

Sir.—Amid so much publicity about the teachers' pay claim, may I draw attention to what they are not claiming?

They are not claiming this year for complete restoration of pay levels set by a perfectly respectable, government appointed review body over ten years ago. They are not claiming for several thousand pounds of compensation for all the years that their salaries have been substantially below the proper level.

They are in fact claiming for a very modest step towards the restoration of a correct salary.

Sir.—Keith Joseph has stated in parliament that the present claim is not remotely affordable. If a modern, industrialised state such as Britain really cannot afford to provide adequate resources to educate its people, and teachers' salaries form only a part of this, then, either third world status cannot be very far in the future or perhaps somebody is being dishonest.

Robert Brown,

Stevensage,

Herts.

Sir.—I refer to your story (April 28) about whether or not the NUT may be persuaded to discontinue strike action and re-enter pay talks.

Perhaps the best way of bringing this about would be to ask Mr. Kinnock to go along to the NUT and repeat his words recorded on your back page on the same day: "The people who say they can help youngsters and their terrible problems with strikes are more interested in their own delusions than in the kids' realities."

Peter Dawson

Professional Association of Teachers

Derby.

A charter that relies on worn-out ideas

Sir.—The Charter for Jobs is an extraordinary and depressing triumph of hope over experience. Its protagonists, the politicians, civil servants and other policy-makers of the late sixties and seventies, whose economic policies failed so notably and, in so failing, paved the way for the bitter, heartless dogma of these Thatcher years, appear to have learnt nothing from their, and our, trauma, as they take up once more their discredited formulae.

Where in the Charter is there any recognition of the quality of work, both in terms of personal development and social usefulness and as to whether employment induces dependency or has an enabling function; of the need to ensure wide access to and balance between formal and informal economic activity; or of the urgent necessity of abolishing the poverty and unemployment traps, redistributing income and opening up the labour market?

No attention is given to the desirability of directing and controlling technological change so that it serves people rather than dominating them, enhancing their skills rather than displacing them; to the ecological imperative of ensuring that new jobs conserve resources and the environment, rather than depleting and destroying them; or to the danger of moving towards a dual society run by a highly-paid technocratic elite, in which the work of the majority becomes increasingly marginal economically (the Charter's "job guarantee" looks suspiciously like a means of institutionalising this marginality).

The most dispiriting aspect of the Charter is its continuing reliance on "more output" as the means of achieving greater employment, without discussing what sort of output it has in mind. Fall to most economists these days and they will freely admit that GNP is a most imperfect measure of human welfare, yet the Charter persists in calling for under-consumption in a spirit of unregenerated industrialism, with seemingly no regard for what is actually growing—the costs or benefits of industrial society—or what the ecological implications may be.

All these questions are being explored by The Other Economic Summit (TOES), which recently had its second International Conference. Perhaps I am being hard on the Charter for Jobs, judging it too harshly on the basis of its first published document. We Can Cut Unemployment. Perhaps it will turn its attention to these crucial matters in due course. We must hope so, for with its resources and political clout it could make real progress with these difficult issues. On present evidence, however, the Charter seems to be backing resolutely away from the future with its eyes fixed firmly on the past.

Yours faithfully,

Paul Ekins,

Director.

The Other Economic Summit,

42 Warriner Gardens,

London SW11.

Sir.—The edited version of the first document from Charter for Jobs (April 23), claims that the rate at which machines are replacing human labour is lower now than in the Fifties and Sixties. This claim is based on the grounds that the increase in output per worker-hour is lower now than then. I believe that this is a grossly inflated figure, not been taken into account.

Firstly, productivity is not only affected by the type of machine an operator has to do a job. It is also affected by his level of skill, by his working environment, by other aspects of the working methods and by methods of payment.

Secondly, because of the poor performance of manufacturing industry during the recession, investment in high-technology machinery has not been as high as perhaps the press would have us believe.

Also, the cost of high technology machinery is continuously falling while the capabilities are continuously increasing. It is very easy for a production engineer to justify the purchase of a new machine if it will reduce his labour force because there is an obvious, and easily calculated, cost saving.

I believe that we have yet to see the full consequences of the widespread use of modern technology in the traditional manufacturing industries. Unless demand can grow very quickly so that the rapid increase in productivity which will result can be absorbed, then the dole queues will continue to lengthen.—Yours sincerely

Ian Woods,

Hitchin, Herts.

One law for the rich

Sir.—You deserve congratulations for your leader "The law of the cash register" (April 25) in pointing out that the vast incomes which some lawyers command are in a different financial world from the high street solicitor whose sort of solicitor whose interests are regularly ignored alike by the Law Society and the Lord Chancellor.

You say that our earnings are unlikely to stand comparison with those of a senior police officer. I have news for you. Many cases they for you. Our even compare with those of a lowly police sergeant.

Twenty one years after qualifying as a solicitor, my own earnings with no pension provision in my last financial year were below £10,000.

I know from information reaching me from all parts of the country that I am not alone, and yet we are required to exercise the same degree of care and skill as our better paid brethren in what are often very demanding cases. We are tired of hearing from judges and others that we must be more diligent or that for a pitance (for nothing at all) we must be at the beck and call of all. In many cases the only thing which keeps us going is a passionate concern for justice.

One is driven to the unhappy conclusion that Mrs Thatcher's concern for the maintenance of law and order means a highly paid police force, with money to burn on lavishly built new crown courts, but no provision for the maintenance of justice for all and sundry. If we solicitors cannot afford to stay in practice, who will defend the poor and the needy?—Yours faithfully,

Stanley Best,

Torrington

Devon.

Sir.—On April 1 Norman

Fowler simultaneously introduced restrictions on the drugs which doctors may issue NHS prescriptions for, and raised the NHS prescription charge to 50p, telling the House of Commons that this was to contain the costs of and raise more revenue for the NHS.

Like thousands of other doctors I have been bombarded with mail from the compulsory pointing out that the retail price of a small supply of some blacklisted preparations is marginally less than 22, and urging me to issue private prescriptions.

With a green paper shortly to be published about the primary care system, and this measures appear to be stimulating demand, previously negligible, for private general practitioner services.

Would this have been possible without the constitutional change brought about by the present government that to mislead the House of Commons need no longer force a resignation from government or Parliament?

Simon Fordham,

Nottingham.

Sir.—I was saddened to read (April 23) that the Government is to support the

City of London's bid to stage

the 1992 Olympics. A great opportunity will thus be missed to bring fresh incentives to another region.

Government support for staging the Olympics in Manchester, Birmingham or

Edinburgh would perhaps allow some redistribution of employment and wealth.

Many visitors would wish to see London. Already most tourists do. Those who would come to the Olympics could still visit that city.

But I forget: the welfare

of the whole of our nation

does not seem to be the concern of the present government and yet another opportunity for imaginative action

is passed over in continuation of their policy to give to those who already have.—

Yours faithfully,

H. Delany,

Macclesfield,

Cheshire.

Games people want to play

Sir.—John Rodda has a nerve to claim (April 23)

that Manchester bid to host the 1992 Olympics is irrelevant.

On his criteria alone Manchester will meet all of the requirements of a successful

Olympic applicant—a city that has one of the leading European international airports, a city that has a vast range of hotel facilities, excellent cultural facilities and a good sporting pedigree.

John Rodda should recognise that if London hosts the games, then in 1992 either the city will be a half from the additional flood of visitors to the Games on top of London's existing tourists; or London's important tourist traffic will be driven away by the fear of the numbers flooding to the Games.

Manchester has the ability and the will to host the Games and John Rodda will not prevent us from submitting a positive bid to the British Olympic Association.—Yours sincerely,

(Councillor) Kevin Lim,

Manchester City Council,

Manchester.

Sir.—I was saddened to

read (April 23) that the Government is to support the

City of London's bid to stage

the 1992 Olympics. A great opportunity will thus be missed to bring fresh incentives to another region.

Government support for staging the Olympics in Manchester, Birmingham or

Edinburgh would perhaps

allow some redistribution of employment and wealth.

Many visitors would wish to see London. Already most tourists do. Those who would come to the Olympics could still visit that city.

But I forget: the welfare

of the whole of our nation

does not seem to be the concern of the present government and yet another opportunity for imaginative action

is passed over in continuation of their policy to give

to those who already have.—

Yours faithfully,

H. Delany,

Macclesfield,

Cheshire.

Miscellany at large

Sir.—The puerility and the dangerous hypocrisy of the British government's

"tit-for-tat" policy on East-

West espionage encourage me to venture for the first time the Official Secrets Act which I signed some 31 years ago.

Alongside hundreds of other National Servicemen, I was trained as a Special Operations branch of the Royal

Signal Corps with the sole purpose of "listening in" to the radio broadcasts of potentially enemy countries.

Most of my time was spent in writing down the coded messages of the Radio Sol-

</

One law for the rich

Death of the Mail - inside story

Laurence Gandar, its former editor, on the end of South Africa's best-known paper

IT USED to be said that if ever the Rand Daily Mail came to grief it would be because it failed too close to the wind in its attacks on the apartheid policies of the Nationalist Government.

In the event the Mail has been killed off by its own parent company, South African Associated Newspapers, a purely commercial grounds. Its losses, the company said, had become unsustainable.

Yet there is a distinct political thread running through the saga of the Mail's demise. And, yes, the Government has indeed scored a remarkable political victory in the elimination of its principal press opponent, not least because it has happened in such an oblique fashion as to obscure the Government's role in the affair.

It is perfectly true, as the SAAN board of directors claims, that the newspaper industry is grievously over-traded, and that all papers are suffering the effects of this. But a crucial point here - and it has been insufficiently appreciated in all the long discussions about the Mail's financial problems - is that the Government deliberately set out in 1976 to harm or, better still, silence when things have been going particularly badly for Perskor itself.

I believe there is clear evidence that Perskor was in no condition to face a prolonged war of attrition and would have itself been forced to pull out if SAAN had not so obviously been suffering a collapse of will.

And for the 82-year-old Rand Daily Mail, with its proud traditions built up through many a stormy battle, to have thrown in the towel at the feet of a comparatively new comer of such dishonourable origins is, in my book, shameful.

But would the Mail's situation have improved greatly if The Citizen, instead, were to have been seen off the premises? Perhaps not at first, although it could reasonably expect a useful circulation gain and some small extra advertising revenue. It would, however, have put the Mail back into the same sort of competitive situation it was in nine years ago, that of being the only English language morning paper in the richest and most populous region. It is still, with its outstanding business section, arguably the best overall morning paper. Its reputation as a crusading newspaper, strong on investigative reporting, remains high. Its editorial policies, contentious as they may have been many years ago, have proved both right and relevant and are increasingly being accepted as part of the conventional wisdom of the country today, even by the Nationalist Government itself.

With its truly multi-racial readership, with the respect it enjoys among black opinion-formers and with the goodwill shown towards it by the bulk of black urban dwellers, there is no other newspaper so favourably positioned for the Mail to cash in on the vast mass consumer market of tomorrow, fuelled by burgeoning black buying power.

How is it not possible to make a newspaper a product with these great advantages? This is a question one asks oneself over and over again though it is essentially one for management to answer.

That there have been management lapses at SAAN is widely believed, the most recent of them being in the vital area of circulation/distribution. The latest issue of Finance Week, which has in the past shown itself to be remarkably well informed and perceptive in press matters, puts the matter bluntly. Under a heading "Management by trial and error, especially error," it says that when the hyperbole of the outcry at the Mail's closure has quietened, "what emerges is a frightening commentary on the quality of SAAN management."

Finance Week is not alone in finding fault in this sphere. In a report which SAAN itself commissioned in 1983, the two-man team from the London Financial Times called in to investigate the scheme of turning the Mail into a financial daily, reached the following conclusion: "There is little prospect of finding a solution to the RDM's problems without extensive management changes."

The newspaper has considerable strengths which appear not to have been properly researched or exploited.

What adds to the sense of tragedy in my mind is the belief I have that the man who could have turned the Mail around was on the spot and in an ideal position for the task. I refer to Raymond Louw, a former editor who was sidelined to the post of general manager of SAAN there to be steadily isolated from the action and finally fired, adding to the long string of editors got rid of in various ways. He is a man of tremendous energy, drive and tenacity, capable of inspiring a strong team spirit among the staff and possessing what has been so sadly lacking in the past - an unquenchable faith in the Mail and its future.

As is all too evident, the closure of the Mail is not just a domestic industry matter, the outcome of straight forward rivalry between competing groups. Not only is it a grievous blow to the strength and wellbeing of the English-language press as a whole, but it has profound implications for the country's internal politics on the one hand and its external relations on the other.

Media File

UNDISMAYED by the Media Page's sceptical reaction last year to his Worldnet Satellite press conference system, Uleam has been on the move and recruited a daily programme schedule around it, making a different view of American culture available to anyone around the world served by a television station willing to pluck it out of the skies.

Worldnet was launched in November 1983 by the US Information Agency's television and film service, linking Washington by satellite with 40 embassies, and putting overseas what local journalists can be brought in to take part in face-to-face multi-point link-ups, to question the US Secretary of State George Shultz, Caspar Weinberger, and indeed Helmut Kohl.

Undoubtedly an imaginative use of modern technology for what USA delicately terms "public diplomacy," especially for journalists who will never accept the US line about "countdown," and "roger," and even "Houston."

It does not quite come without strings. America Today is free, but other material might be subject to restrictions which would have to be cleared for re-transmission, but the USA is clearly aware that cable operators, British included, hungry for material, to fill empty hours with happy to get this daily package from Washington if they can get it pulled off the satellite. They also hope it will give a more positive view of the USA than purveyed through Dallas or Dynast.

Barry Cox challenges the role of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission

Slap judgment

IT IS unlikely that the Broadcasting Complaints Commission now well into its fourth year - with the approval of the television and radio journalists whose work it monitors. Few people will therefore have been surprised at London Weekend Television's point-by-point refutation of last week's BBC adjudication which upheld part of a complaint by Patrick Harrington, prominent National Frontist, and North London Poly student, against The London Programme.

However, we are not just piqued at losing part of this particular argument. The decision makes clearer what the BBC thinks its real job is. Since we are stuck with the Commission, broadcasters could at least hope its activities would throw up a few useful thoughts about journalistic ethics. Instead, last week's ruling (along with other recent judgments against BBC Radio's Checkpoint) suggest that, far from intellectually engaging with difficult practical problems, the BBC wants above all to slap journalistic wrists whenever it has the opportunity.

In The London Programme case, Patrick Harrington complained about an edition last May which had looked at the attempt by some North London Poly students to prevent him studying there in the normal way because of his National Front associations.

Harrington had two complaints. First, that the programme had unfairly emphasised the part of the National Front in the story; second, that it had looked at the attempt by some North London Poly students to prevent him studying there in the normal way because of his National Front associations.

Both of these raised important issues. The first went to the heart of the difficulty encountered whenever journalists try to interpret the events they are describing, and the second addressed the familiar but vital problem of making sure all participants involved in a television programme know the context in which they are appearing.

The opportunity thus afforded the BBC to do some useful work in these crucial areas was the greater because Patrick Harrington's presentation was intelligent and carefully formulated. It provoked an equally elegant and considered response from LWT, masterminded by David Cox, the executive producer of The London Programme.

Unfortunately the BBC's efforts were not always in the same league. It admitted it was faced with a clear conflict of evidence on both counts. In both cases it has dodged the implications of this, and has chosen to deliver a rather crude piece of rough justice, effectively backing LWT in the first complaint and Harrington in the second.

Worse, on the point that matters for the future - how to handle interviewees fairly - the BBC has come up with a decision which, if it were to be followed, would be either impracticable or tyrannical.

A brief word on the procedures. The original

... that's what Cannes is about but Peter Fiddick wonders why some independents are there

IT HAD to be done in Cannes - where else? If you are going to announce the launch of a European rival to Dallas and Dynast, a "fast-moving, glamorous international serial," and if you are a big TV company you do it. But as an independent producer, to do Cannes in style is to make a statement. Others go, because they need to sell a film, or a series, but they buy bucket-shop air-fares and stay out of town. And some do not go at all, because even that much is planned for in the overheads.

The distinctions are suddenly more important, because there is a certain romanticism in the air about the health and the nature of the British independent production sector. It is borne partly by the success of Channel 4 in establishing its popularity, a range of its own and a decent measure of what is recognised as "quality." Those who three or four years ago were demanding "Where are all these independent producers going to come from?" are quieter now; clearly, there is creative life outside the network factories.

But this reasonable perception was given a dangerous twist in the run-up to the BBC licence-fee decision, with the revelation that the Peat Marwick report on the corporation's efficiency had suggested a continuing comparison be made with the way CA operates, the particular implication being that a system of independent producers is more cost-effective than a staff-based one.

This was viewed sceptically by some, as I said, because of the difficulty of comparing like with like, but lauded by others, including Phil Redmond, whose Brookside Productions creates and makes CA's Merseybeat soap opera, and John Gau, the ex-BBC man whose incarnation as an independent and leading light of the independent Programme Producers' Association, reveals him as one of the old empire's sternest critics.

Both sides might be right. There is a certain sort of risk-taking, as well as of complacency, more likely to be nurtured by a major organisation. There is a desire to avoid a successful programme, as well as an inability to commit to the medium-term future, that comes from scraping from contract to contract, dependent all the time on finding the next co-production dollar.

And if the complacency and indulgence exist in the big systems, so the day-to-day short-rations and inability to build for the future exist in the independent sector. The dangerous romanticism lies in the unwillingness to recognise that in unfavourable conditions significant slices of it could collapse tomorrow.

Brian Wenham, in his effortlessly superior BBC-man mode, insists on referring not to "independents" but to "freelancers." It irritates a lot of them immensely but it still hits a nerve. There is a gulf between those who have a real corporate existence and those who tomorrow might just take their talents off to another attractive job - back at the Beeb, maybe, or a nice short-term ITV contract - and leave Oxojuice Productions as just a blip on next year's Schedule D.

It is a question of capital, and the chance to create it. The big independents are the ones who have it. Goldeneye, backed by the Pearson publishing empire, Video Arts built from Cleese and Jay's training films, Limehouse with its backer, Wallingstone, bravely persuaded to follow from the ashes of Southern Television. Phil Redmond has the Brookside contract and a successful programme. Peter Montagnon's Antelope now has a slice of Maxwell money behind it.

But on one level of analysis, these are precisely the companies which do not have to rely totally on Channel 4 - and in several instances, they don't. They find there is not enough work available from one channel, that margins are tighter than they believe they need, that the decision-making process is often too slow to give continuity of development and production. They may still love Jeremy Isaacs dearly, but they look

The Red Cross steps into the breach

Iain Guest on a move to give journalists front-line protection

Foreign File

PEDRO TIVANE, the deputy editor of Noticias, a Mozambican newspaper, was backed to death last year by axe-wielding rebels in the south of the country. It was a mean and brutal attack, but it was one example of the hazards facing working journalists, especially in the Third World.

Throughout Latin America, 150 have died in the last 20 years, and another 54 disappeared. Five provincial journalists have died in the Philippines in the last year, 63 Iraqis have died covering the Gulf War, and 19 Arabs have died in the Lebanon, including the two CBS cameramen recently shot by an Israeli tank.

These figures illustrate clearly that journalism is a hazardous profession, and the better the story the greater the hazard. The issue has been taken up by the International Committee of the Red Cross following a two-day encounter between the Red Cross and media representatives in Vevay last week.

The most concrete idea that emerged was for a round-the-clock hotline which could be used by journalists to report a colleague missing or goaded. Typically Red Cross officials immediately started lowering expectations. Most harassment against journalists occurs in their own country, while covering riots, repression or investigating organised crime. Governments are under no legal obligation to accept Red Cross services on such internal matters and often don't, yet it is precisely in such situations that a journalist runs most risk.

Nonetheless, it is significant that the organisation has agreed to take up the issue of journalists' safety which has been trapped in 15-year-old UN negotiations.

The UN tried and failed to draft a convention on the safety of journalists in the early 1970s. It was then taken up by Unesco, where it ran into the fierce debate over the new information order. Socialist and Third World organisations argued for clearer identification for journalists and an international commission to licence them. Western organisations replied that this would restrict the free flow of information and even increase the reporters' risks.

This disagreement came to a head in Unesco February 1981 and then lapsed. But the protagonists have not given up.

Why has the cautious Red

Cross taken up such a controversy? One answer is that the policy of discretion is beginning to backfire, particularly in the Gulf War where the Government of Iran accused the Red Cross of spying and kicked it out last October.

Another worry is the fact that only 50 governments have ratified two additional protocols to the Geneva conventions, drawn up in 1977.

In short, Red Cross officials are starting to regret their hazy relationship with the press. One way to woo editors, they reckon, would be to show some interest in the plight of the working reporter. In addition, they feel the growing toll of journalists is symptomatic of a growing tendency to shoot first and talk later, resulting in a slow, insidious erosion of the principles of humanitarian law.

The question now is whether the organisation can be of practical help to journalists while at the same time steering clear of the ideological controversy.

The first 1977 protocol contains the model of a suggested international ID card for use by journalists covering armed conflict. It is a device this is solely to help distinguish the reporter as a non-combatant. But there is little doubt that it could be used to ensure that the Red Cross on the battlefield, Red Cross auspices.

"An ID card won't protect a journalist from being shot. But it might be useful in cases of arrest," says Kaarle Nordenstrem, the Finnish president of the Prague-based International Organisation of Journalists.

He argues that if journalists were licensed and backed up by an international committee of professionals it might give them the sort of prestige, and hence protection, enjoyed by the Red Cross on the battlefield.

Western media organisations remain as sceptical as ever, and determined to ensure that the Red Cross does not take on the mantle of crippled Unesco.

Peter Fiddick
Media Editor

Marketing Executive

to be responsible for media relations and public information services and assist with the development and operation of the Museum's marketing. An important part of the responsibilities of the post will be work associated with the development of the membership of the Friends of the Museum.

You should have a degree or an equivalent qualification in the field of marketing services. Previous experience in a leisure or tourist area of operation, the ability to deal with visitors, visitor promotion, press and media related matters is essential. A knowledge of, and experience in, editorial work, print buying and advertising.

work together with a knowledge of, or an interest in, maritime history would be desirable.

Salary: (under review) as Curator Grade D £10,575 - £13,870. Starting salary according to qualifications and experience.

For further details and an application form (to be returned by 24 May 1985) write to Civil Service Commission, Alcon Link, Basingstoke, Hants, RG21 1JB, or telephone Basingstoke (0256) 468551. (answering service operates outside office hours). Please quote ref: 416382.

National Maritime Museum
An equal opportunity employer

ilea Inner London Education Authority

Learning Resources Branch, Television & Publishing Centre, Thackeray Rd, London SW8.

Designer in education publishing

Salary range £5,804 to £9,871 plus £1,418 London Weighting Allowance. We are looking for an experienced, versatile and professionally able designer who can solve problems imaginatively and work both on their own and with teachers as part of a team producing varied educational materials. Closing date for completed application forms is 17 May 1985.

Mobile Video Recording Section - Secretary/Technician

The Mobile Video Recording Section at Learning Resources Branch makes and packages observational recordings of learning and teaching situations in schools and colleges for use in teacher education. Based mainly at the centre, personal assistance to the Section Head and technical contributions will be required. The post involves a variety of equipment and in storage and retrieval of software.

Salary range £5,804 to £9,871 plus £1,418 London Weighting Allowance and an irregular hours allowance of £228. The closing date for completed application forms is 13 May 1985.

Marketing and Publicity Section

An experienced person is required to join a small but important team working with a wide range of marketing & publicity matters. The successful candidate will provide professional support across the whole range of the Branch's marketing and publicity requirements with special emphasis on liaison with agencies within and outside the Authority, copyright and educational publishing generally.

Salary range £2,808 to £11,848 plus £1,418 London Weighting Allowance. The closing date for completed application forms is 25 May 1985. Full job descriptions and application forms are available from ECU/Estab 18, Room 365, The County Hall, London SE1 7PB. Please enclose S.A.E. There are no suitable jobs available for women only. ILEA is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

BBC

Opportunities for Technically-minded young people

For those interested in the technology of broadcasting the BBC can offer unrivalled prospects.

This year a number of vacancies exist for young people to train as Engineers working throughout the UK. In order for an application to be successful you will need to possess good 'O' Level passes in English, Maths and Physics and to have studied to examination standard in A Level Maths and Physics. Alternatively we will consider TEC Diplomas in a suitable Electronics-based subject.

Successful applicants will also have a strong practical proven interest in a relevant subject such as Hi-Fi, amateur electronics or home video.

In addition there are a limited number of vacancies in our Operational Department for Camera Operators and Audio Assistants; here above all, your interests will be of sufficient depth to discuss technicalities of photography and sound. A good standard of literacy and numeracy will be required and typically will include 'O' Level passes in English, Maths and Physics. As all posts are in Operational areas a minimum age of 18 is necessary plus normal hearing and colour vision.

For further details and application form please write to The Engineering Recruitment Officer, BBC, Broadcasting House, P.O. Box 28L, London W1A 2BL, quoting reference no. 85.E.4022/G and enclosing an s.a.e. measuring at least 9" x 5".

We are an equal opportunities employer.

UNITED KINGDOM

Communications Professional

Central London

In BICC, one of Britain's biggest international companies, we are committed to improving all aspects of our corporate communications. With the work expanding rapidly I am now looking for a No.2 - a young communications professional to play a leading role in the key areas of research, writing, the production of AV's, organising 'events', buying design and print-work and managing regular publications. To fit the job, you'll need to be educated to degree level, have broad experience - and be highly professional in all aspects of the communications function, have well developed analytical skills, and be creative and an excellent communicator on a personal level. You will, of course, be able to work effectively to tight deadlines with a minimum of supervision. It's a highly responsible and stimulating opportunity for a top quality operator who wants the chance of both immediate personal achievement and career development prospects. Salary will be negotiable. Please write or call: Tim Sharp, Communications Manager, BICC plc, 21 Bloomsbury Street, London WC1B 3QN. Tel: 01-637 1300.

BICC
Engineering tomorrow's world in cables, components and construction for communications and power.

HUMBERSIDE COLLEGE of Higher Education

Senior Technician Learning Resources

£6,555-£8,262

A Senior Technician is required in the Library and Learning Resources Service. The postholder will join a team of technicians providing services to support teaching and learning activities including responsibility for the day-to-day operation of a sound and video studio plus associated equipment and facilities.

Applicants must have a relevant high level technical qualification and experience of all aspects of sound and video recording.

Application forms and job description from: The Personnel Office, Humberside College of Higher Education, Cottingham Road, Hull HU6 7TE. Tel: 0482 244506. Closing date: 13.5.85.

National Maritime Museum, Greenwich

Assistant Curator - Historic Photographs

You would identify, index and catalogue historic photographs and negatives; deal with written and telephone enquiries and supervise visitors; maintain records; access new material; assist in the production of displays, exhibitions and catalogues; and maintain the collection. Work will include involvement with the computer based documentation programme. You should normally have a degree in a relevant subject but other qualifications or experience of special value will be considered. An informed interest in maritime affairs of the 19th or 20th centuries would be an advantage as would cataloguing or archive experience. A genuine interest in museum work is desirable.

SALARY: (under review) as Curator Grade 5, £6745 - £7220. Starting salary according to qualifications and experience.

For further details and an application form (to be returned by 23 May 1985) write to Civil Service Commission, Alcon Link, Basingstoke, Hants, RG21 1JB, or telephone Basingstoke (0256) 468551. (answering service operates outside office hours). Please quote ref: 416382. There are no suitable jobs available for women only. An equal opportunity employer.

GRAPHICS TEAM LEADER

We are looking for talented magazine designers to lead a small graphics team responsible for editorial pages and cover design of our range of ten monthly magazines. We need someone with experience of running a design team, who, together with his team, can work directly with editors to produce a magazine that is both visually appealing and easy to read. It's a highly responsible and stimulating opportunity for a top quality operator who wants the chance of both immediate personal achievement and career development prospects. Salary will be negotiable. Please write or call: Tim Sharp, Communications Manager, BICC plc, 21 Bloomsbury Street, London WC1B 3QN. Tel: 01-637 1300.

ASP
Agency Specialist Publications Ltd.
P.O. Box 35, Woking House, Woking Road, Haslemere, Surrey, GU26 0AB.

Oxford City Council

An Equal Opportunities Employer.

CAN YOU STAND THE HEAT? LEISURE MANAGER

Salary Range: £13,000-£14,000 p.a.

A bright new future awaits an enthusiastic, capable Manager who can run Oxford's successful new Ice Rink. This is a demanding position, calling for considerable expertise in the leisure industry or Local Authority leisure management. The chosen candidate will be expected to promote, develop and manage the whole facility with an eye to expanding the range of activities and building on an already established thriving base. It is important to note that previous experience in managing an Ice Rink is not considered essential, however candidates will be able to display a proven record in the successful management of a local authority or leisure facility. Temporary housing accommodation may be available and financial assistance towards up to £1,750 will be paid. Application forms and further particulars available from the Personnel Officer, 35 Queen Street, Oxford OX1 1EF. Telephone: Oxford 248811, ext 465 or 261. Closing date: 17th May, 1985. Applications are welcome from all regardless of sex, marital status, race or disability.

BRIGHTON POLYTECHNIC ADMINISTRATION OFFICER - SHORT COURSES

£9,477-£10,107

The Department of Business Management now wishes to appoint an Administrator to manage and develop the Short Courses. Essential requirements are a relevant degree or professional qualification, sound analytical, interpersonal and communicative skills, plus the ability to drive, be free to travel and use a typewriter and word processor. The successful candidate will have experience of more than one of the following: organising exhibitions, conferences, seminars, marketing, training, or public relations. Potential and scope will be offered to an energetic, self-motivated, systematic hard worker. CV's with contact telephone number by 18th May, to Ms Lena Jeffers, MIDDLETON JEFFERS RECRUITMENT LIMITED, 25 Hanover Square, London W1.

FINANCIAL JOURNALIST

You are an ambitious journalist with a couple of years' experience under your belt. You would like to spend your time meeting the people who run the country's industry and deciding whether their companies are worth investing in. Alternatively, you are an established securities analyst who would like to break into journalism. Either way, you want to join the small team producing Britain's leading stockmarket publication, reviewing strongly under new leadership. So send your c.v. now to:

FTBI
Jennifer Leaver
Personnel Manager
F T Business Information
Greyhound Place
Fetter Lane
London EC4A 1ND

AUDIO PRODUCTION COMPANY RADIO/AUDIO PRODUCER

For record and magazine programme production at Ipswich. Broadcast and studio operation experience essential. Overseas experience useful. Salary negotiable. Apply to: Jayne Marshall, Sound Programming Consultants Ltd., 26 St. Margaret's Green, Ipswich IP4 2BS.

GRADUATE OPPORTUNITY

Medium-sized, commercial Litho Printer seeks Trainee Estimator. Education to degree level, and although background relevant to printing is preferred, this is not essential as full training will be given. The successful candidate will be young, enthusiastic and self-motivated. Write for application form to: Ms K. Nolan, Krieson Printing, 184 Acton Lane, NW10.

Production Assistant £7,317

The British Council, a worldwide educational and cultural organisation, is looking for a Production Assistant to work in its Audio Visual Unit. The Unit creates film, video, tape/slide and audio material for the Council's use. These are produced for the purpose of information, promotion and instruction and draw upon the whole range of the Council's subject interests. The Production Assistant will act as a point of reference in production projects, assist the producers with specialist production duties on location and in studios and undertake general administrative work within the Unit. Some travel in Britain and abroad will be required. Applicants should have a good general education and at least 2 years' recent experience as a Production Assistant working on film, television or video programmes. Starting salary £7,317 (inclusive of London Weighting). For further details and an application form to be returned by 17th May 1985, write or phone quoting GS to Personnel Management Department, 65 Davies Street, London W1T 2AA, telephone 01-489 8011 extension 3461, 3463 or 3174.

The British Council

The British Council is an Equal Opportunities Employer.

EDITOR, "Oxfam News"

OXFAM is looking for a journalist to join its busy Press Office team.

The role of the Press Office is to act as a source of information rather than a publicity department for Oxfam. This involves working with local, national and international media on aid and development stories, based on the experience of our overseas staff.

To edit and manage Oxfam's quarterly newspaper with a circulation of 100,000 copies for staff, volunteers, supporters and others interested in development issues. This involves designing and editing pages, commissioning articles from Oxfam staff and outside contributors, writing and rewriting some articles and attending the make-up process to check and sign off pages before printing.

The editor will also be expected to play a full role as a member of the press office team. This will involve answering queries from journalists, issuing press releases and arranging interviews and press conferences when necessary.

This post will be on a four-year contract initially with a review at the end of the first year to consider the possibility of making this a permanent post. Starting salary £7,950 per annum rising by annual increments to £9,774 p.a.

For further details please send a stamped addressed envelope to: Personnel Department, Oxfam, 274 Banbury Road, Oxford, OX2 7DZ. Closing date for completed application forms is 13th May 1985. OXFAM IS AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES EMPLOYER.

NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION PUBLIC RELATIONS DIVISION SUB-EDITOR

The NFU Press Unit requires copy that is short, sharp and to the point. The successful applicant is likely to be an experienced agricultural journalist with a flair for "tight" sub-editing. The challenge is to tap NFU sources, write, sub-edit and edit for a lively authentic daily news operation to run alongside a comprehensive databank of farming reference material.

FARMING INFORMATION OFFICER

The NFU Farming Information Centre is being developed as the central reference source and signposting service for information about British agriculture and the countryside. The successful applicant will be responsible for a comprehensive reference library and responding to requests for information from a wide range of people. Candidates should have training or experience in library information work. A knowledge of agriculture is desirable. Further details of both posts from Director of Staff Relations, NFU, Agriculture House, Knightsbridge, London S.W.1.

RESEARCHER

London Researchers is seeking a part time (approx. 10 hours per week) researcher to assist with the regular supply of prices of unusual commodities in various countries. The successful applicant will probably be a trained researcher or journalist with experience in the financial sector, language ability, and the flexibility to work irregular hours. For further information contact Mary Ann Colyer on 01-402 0835.

The Royal Pavilion, Art Gallery and Museums Department

Keeper of Decorative Art

The holder of this post will be responsible for the unique collection of decorative arts in the Royal Pavilion, Museum and Art Gallery.

Applicants should be graduates, the Museums Diploma and/or museum experience would be an advantage. Salary £7,524-£10,107 p.a. Generous relocation assistance includes grants of up to £3,750 plus full reimbursement of removal costs, lodging and travel allowances.

Full details of the post may be obtained from the Director of the Royal Pavilion, Brighton BN1 1UE, to whom written applications giving full details, together with the names and addresses of two referees should be sent by 31 May.

Borough of Brighton

Assistant Press Officer

The Public Relations Department of The Royal Bank of Scotland is seeking an Assistant Press Officer to be based in the City.

This is a job for a professional, probably aged around 25-30, preferably with experience in financial journalism. The ability to write well and a wide knowledge of the media are essential and technical understanding of finance and economics would be of distinct benefit.

Previous Press Office experience would be of advantage while an ability to deal with management at all levels is vital.

The post will be of interest to those now earning around £10,000 per annum. Attractive fringe benefits include a non-contributory pension and a house purchase scheme, after a suitable qualifying period.

Applications and enquiries, stating age, qualifications and full career details should be made to writing, marking the envelope 'Application' to: Miss M. P. Hawkins, The Royal Bank of Scotland Group plc, 24 Lombard Street, London EC3A 9BA.

Williams & Glyn's Bank plc
A member of The Royal Bank of Scotland Group

ROYAL THEATRE, NORTHAMPTON THEATRE-IN-EDUCATION DIRECTOR

As a result of the Arts Council's Development strategy and matching funding from Northampton County Council and Northampton Borough Council, The Royal Theatre in launching a Theatre-in-Education company to work throughout the County. This important pilot project will form the basis of a permanent T.I.E. Company. Initial contract for six months plus negotiable pro rata preparation.

Please write for details of appointment to: Artistic Director, Royal Theatre, Guildhall Road, Northampton NN1 1EA. Closing date for completed applications: Monday, 13th May, 1985.

MAY BANK HOLIDAY

Will Readers, Advertisers and Agencies please note that there will be no Creative & Media or Secretarial appointments in The Guardian on Monday, May 6th.

These features will next appear on Wednesday, May 8th.

Copy must be received by 10.30 a.m. on Friday May 3rd.

London: 01-278 2332

Telephone Sales 01-430 1234

Manchester: 061-832 7200

THE GUARDIAN

A SENIOR ROLE IN LEISURE MANAGEMENT

£20,556 - £22,608 p.a.

Chelmsford, which comprises the County Town of Essex together with an attractive rural area, is conveniently situated for London and the coast.

The Council is seeking an experienced manager capable of making a significant contribution to the development of the Borough as a major centre for recreation and leisure within the Eastern Region and to serve an expanding population which is expected to rise from 143,000 to 160,000 over the next few years.

The person appointed Recreation Manager will head a busy department employing 111 full time employees responsible for:- the Civic and Sturton theatres, a multi purpose entertainment hall, the museum, two indoor sports centres and over 1,000 acres of open space and riverside walks. There is a library agency.

A major new £2m. leisure complex is being built incorporating an ice rink, sports hall and other facilities. The provision of museum extensions, an art gallery and a golf course is under active consideration.

Applicants should have direct experience of a number of the disciplines involved, including entertainment and the arts, preferably gained in a local government environment. Managerial ability is essential as well as an imaginative approach.

Car allowance £1,400, generous relocation scheme, temporary housing, further information from the personnel Officer, Civic Centre, Chelmsford, Essex CM1 1JE (Tel: 0245 267333). Applications with full c.v. by the 11th May 1985.

Please quote reference: C/CBC

CHELMSFORD BOROUGH COUNCIL

New Magazine for China

Business Press International, the world's largest publisher of trade and technical titles, has entered into a joint-venture with the leading publishing Company in China to launch a series of titles.

The first title, to be launched in October 1985 is aimed at China's huge and rapidly expanding energy business - potentially the world's largest growth area. Exciting opportunities now exist to be part of this unique new venture and we now require:-

Advertisement Manager

The successful applicant will be required to launch and build the title into the international success that is its potential. Applicants for this demanding and rewarding position should be able to display the ability to prepare and present a sophisticated sales story, have the management abilities to motivate sales personnel and overseas agents, and contribute to the overall on-going development of the title.

Previous international experience, although not essential, would be an asset, a proven sales record a prerequisite.

The salaries will be commensurate with the positions, plus commission and company car.

To apply, please write enclosing a curriculum vitae or telephone Barry Chelms, Regional Manager - China, Reed Business Publishing Developments, Times House, Throby Way, Sutton, Surrey SM1 4AR Tel: 01-661 8771.

Business Press International is an Equal Opportunities Employer.

Display Sales Executive

This is a superb opportunity to work in a launch team where the successful applicant will need to build up the client base and develop those accounts for on-going business.

Initially, the Sales Executive will operate in the UK, however, he/she should expect to obtain an overseas territory in the short term which will broaden the successful candidate's international expertise considerably.

Applicants should display a high level of sales ability and self motivation in order to be worthy of this position.

The salaries will be commensurate with the positions, plus commission and company car.

To apply, please write enclosing a curriculum vitae or telephone Barry Chelms, Regional Manager - China, Reed Business Publishing Developments, Times House, Throby Way, Sutton, Surrey SM1 4AR Tel: 01-661 8771.

Business Press International is an Equal Opportunities Employer.

BUSINESS PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Start a successful career in selling

International Thomson Publishing Ltd. is making a considerable investment in its High Technology Group. Last year we launched Communications ahead of all competition and New Electronics was awarded "the best trade relaunch of 1984".

We have just relaunched Broadcast, the most established and respected journal for the broadcast industry, which now incorporates Television Weekly.

Now we need two Telesales Canvassers to join a successful team working in this exciting, expanding industry. You should be keen to work hard in a competitive environment and be confident in your abilities to persuade and communicate clearly. Experience is not essential as full training will be given. Excellent salary plus a generous commission scheme. L.V.s. and four weeks' holiday rising to five weeks after your first year.

You can call John Kuschner on 01-335 4878 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. to discuss the start of a successful career in a leading publishing company.

IF THIS ADVERTISING SPACE WAS FOR SALE COULD YOU SELL IT?

We are a friendly and highly motivated team who are extremely successful. We need one more Telephone Sales Canvasser to help us break more records in 1985.

If you get the job you'll find yourself working in a brand new, purpose-designed sales office, using all the latest equipment. We work a nine-day fortnight. You will receive a basic salary of over £8,000 and the opportunity to earn more than £2,000 in bonuses on top of that.

The people we hire will be between the ages of 21-27, bright, articulate, and fast thinking; previous sales experience is essential although the type of selling you have been involved in is not important. If you recognise yourself ring Jan Small between 10 am and 4 pm and persuade her that you are the right person for us.

Jan Small
TELEPHONE SALES MANAGER
01-278 2332
ext 3364
THE GUARDIAN

BRITISH FILM INSTITUTE ETHNIC FILM & TELEVISION ADVISER

c. £11,500-£13,800 (under review)

The British Film Institute is a service organisation promoting the art of Film, Video and Television and is concerned with the cultural implications of these media. The Institute is seeking a person who is enthusiastic and has a cultural awareness and a practical approach to the problems of ethnic groups. This post is offered on a two year contract and its objectives are to re-orientate and promote initiatives relating to ethnic minorities, internally and externally, and to set up communication channels between the relevant groups. There will also be opportunities to research into the history and development of ethnic film culture. The successful candidate will possess excellent communication skills, fluency in writing and experience of cultural organisations. Knowledge of current racial legislation at all levels, and the ability and enthusiasm to initiate a project of this importance.

Further details and an application form are available from Personnel Department, 127 Charing Cross Road, London WC2N 6EA. Tel: 01-477 4255. Closing date: 15th May 1985. WE ARE AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES EMPLOYER

City of Newcastle upon Tyne Education Committee College of Arts and Technology School of Art and Design

Applications are invited for appointment to a senior position within the School of Art and Design, the appointment being at PRINCIPAL LECTURER level.

The Principal seeks a well qualified and experienced person from the area of Three Dimensional/Spatial Design to support and enhance the provision of teaching and subject within the College. A prime responsibility will be to assist in the academic development of courses and staffing at all levels and modes within the School of Art and Design.

We welcome applications from both the design professions and the design teaching areas.

SALARY SCALE: £13,095-£14,580. Application Forms and further particulars are available from the Personnel Officer, College of Arts and Technology, Maple Terrace, Newcastle upon Tyne, NE4 7BA, to be returned by 15 May 1985.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LONDON ASSISTANT SERVICES OFFICER

(Publications, Printing and Central Records)

Applications are invited from suitably qualified persons for the post of Assistant Services Officer to be responsible for Publications, Printing Services and Central Records. Candidates will be expected to have a background of editorial, publications, printing (including photography) relevant administrative and staff management experience, demonstrate an ability to develop these activities in line with technological advances and be able to communicate with all levels of staff.

SALARY SCALE: £11,075-£14,500 p.a. + £1,250 p.a. LA. Applications (see form) including full c.v. and names and addresses of two referees to: Assistant Secretary (Personnel), University College London, Gower Street, London WC1E 6BT. Closing date: 15th May 1985. This is a re-advertisement and previous applicants need not re-apply.

CLWYD COUNTY COUNCIL Library and Museum Service CURATOR

SALARY SCALE 5

£7,524-£9,262 per annum

The post of Curator at the Barmham Industrial Heritage Centre near Wrexham in North Wales will become vacant from 1st June 1985. Applications are invited from persons suitably qualified and experienced in the field of social / industrial history.

Application forms and further details obtainable from the County Personnel and Management Services Officer, Shire Hall, Mold, Chwyd, (Tel. Mold 2124 Ext. 2294), to be returned by 22nd May.

J. A. DAVIES
County Personnel and Management Services Officer

Finance in the Arts

Officers in the Finance Department work closely with the Council's specialist art form officers in assessing the financial requirements of a wide range of clients (both organisations and individuals) using reports, financial data and personal contact. They are also responsible for processing the agreed payments.

We are seeking to fill two posts both reporting to Subsidy Officers who head teams dealing with particular art forms:

Assistant Subsidy Officer (Music)

Applicants must have substantial administrative experience and be used to dealing with financial information. They should also be used to dealing sensitively with people and have a knowledge of, and ideally experience in, arts management, particularly music.

Salary according to experience but on a scale £7,898-£9,792 p.a. (under review).

Subsidy Assistant (Drama and Literature)

Applicants should have basic clerical skills, be used to working with figures and able to draft correspondence. They should also be used to working with the minimum of supervision. An interest in the arts, especially drama and literature, would be an advantage.

Salary according to experience but on a scale £5,882-£7,293 p.a. (under review).

Both postholders will be expected to operate a computer terminal as part of their jobs and training will be provided if necessary.

For an application form and job description, please contact: Personnel, 105 Piccadilly, London W1V 0AU. Tel: 01-629 9485, Ext. 266. Closing date for receipt of applications: 13th May, 1985.

— An Equal Opportunity Employer —

Arts Council
OF GREAT BRITAIN

In 1984 the National Book League selected five schoolbooks for inclusion in their annual exhibition of books chosen for excellence in design and production. Three of the five were published by Longman.

Longman Group, leading educational publishers, now wish to recruit additional Designers. They will join the team working on their English Language Teaching, Reference and Trade Lists.

DEPUTY DESIGN MANAGER

Managerial ability and a wide range of design skills will be required. The Deputy Design Manager will be fully responsible for the work of a team of in-house and freelance designers and illustrators, as well as for his own design projects. Candidates should have a BA Degree in Graphic Design (or equivalent) and at least three years' experience in book design. Ref: L122.

SENIOR DESIGNER

Considerable experience in book design including complex full colour work will be required. The Senior Designer will be fully responsible for a wide variety of design projects. The job will include commissioning freelance designers and illustrators. Candidates should have a BA Degree in Graphic Design (or equivalent) and at least three years' experience in book design. Ref: L123.

If you are interested in one of these vacancies please write (quoting the appropriate reference), enclosing a full CV and stating current salary to:

Fiona Baker, Personnel Executive, Longman Group, Longman House, Burnt Hill, Harlow, Essex CM20 1JE.

Longman

SOUTHERN AREA SALES MANAGER

Macmillan Education requires a Southern Area Sales Manager for its School Book Division.

The territory to be covered stretches from South Wales to the Thames Estuary, and the successful applicant must be prepared to travel this area regularly, hence residence centrally in the territory would be desirable.

Candidates, who ideally will be between 25 and 40, should be capable of effective selling into schools and also of managing a small team of freelance representatives. Experience of educational selling, whilst desirable, is not essential, but the applicant must be energetic, well organised, and capable of self-motivation. A clean driving licence is essential.

The position offers a competitive salary and a company car.

Please apply with full cv to:

Sheilagh Browne, Personnel Manager
MACMILLAN EDUCATION LTD.
Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hants RG21 2XS
Closing date for applications: 13th May, 1985

Oxford University Press

GRAPHIC DESIGNER

We are looking for a capable graphic designer to join our team producing a highly visual range of books for schools and children. We need someone with at least two years relevant experience, who combines a keen eye for typographic detail with a strong sense of graphics. The work involves close collaboration with editorial and production staff throughout the design process and therefore a willingness to work as part of a creative team is essential.

Salary in the range £6,205-£10,125 depending on experience.

Applications in writing with full c.v. to: Sue Johnson, Personnel Department, Oxford University Press, Walton Street, Oxford.

MANTIS DANCE COMPANY

needs an experienced

PRESS & PUBLICITY OFFICER

to take full responsibility for press relations and marketing and to assist with sponsorship and promotion. To start as soon as possible.

Mantis is a revenue-funded contemporary dance company touring mainly to middle-class theatres throughout Britain and abroad.

Salary £9,000. Closing date: 24th May, 1985.

Please apply in writing with c.v. to: Mantis, Dance Umbrella, 28 Harrington Road, London SW7 3RD.

TECHNICAL WRITER

SOCIAN TECHNICAL SERVICES SUPPORT SECTION - HIGH STREET KENSINGTON - WEST LONDON

We are looking for a bright adaptable person with technical writing experience who is able to work as part of a team and interpret our work for non-specialist readers. Some knowledge of computing would be an advantage. British Telecom is one of the largest corporate users of office based Small Business Computers in Europe and we provide technical support for these users.

The successful applicant will join a team of experts who provide computer systems and develop software products. You will need an understanding of the products and an appreciation of the information needed by end users, and how to present it. The work involves responsibility for the preparation of user manuals, brochures and "Which" style reports based on technical documentation produced within the section.

The post offers an interesting future with one of the world's largest telecommunications companies. The starting salary will be up to £12,900.

To find out more about the job, send your application with a resume of your experience to Mrs M Thuyedides, Room 8110, Tenter House, 45 Moorfields, London EC2Y 9TH or contact her on 01-432 8242.

All applications will be treated in the strictest confidence and will receive early replies.

British TELECOM

HERALDING A NEW ERA...

Publicity Officer.....

External Relations Unit.....up to £14,925 (under review)

Aston University is one of the country's leading technological Universities. Building upon an already considerable record of sustained achievement, we're now developing new initiatives in teaching, scholarship and research, and need a first class Publicity Officer who can communicate these to external audiences and the University community.

Reporting to the Director of University Relations, the successful candidate will ensure the smooth running of the Information Office. The primary task is to assess the University's central and departmental public relations needs, to design a strategy to meet these and then to carry this strategy through. The range of responsibilities will reflect the experience of the postholder, but will certainly include developing links with the national and local media, mounting exhibitions and other public events, as well as co-ordinating all the University's PR operations. Producing the University News Sheet 'Aston Fortnight' and assisting in the production of University publications and departmental literature will also fall under your jurisdiction.

Naturally, the post demands someone with exceptional communication skills and organisational ability - probably a graduate, with good experience of working in a University. A knowledge of handling relations with the media and running an in-house news sheet and in-house publications would be extremely advantageous. Whilst endless enthusiasm, energy, and a store of new ideas are a must.

The post is for 3 years but the possibility of a continuing appointment exists for an outstanding candidate.

If you have the qualities this post requires, then please write to or telephone Keith Thomas, Senior Personnel Officer, Aston University, Aston Triangle, Birmingham B4 7ET (tel: 021-359 3611 ext. 4568) quoting Ref. 85/29G. In addition, informal enquiries may be made to Veronica Warner on ext. 4823.

ASTON UNIVERSITY

A SENIOR EDITOR WITH STYLE

A thoroughly experienced journalist wanted to edit a demanding high profile specialist newspaper. Must have ability to write news and features, sub, lead a team and relate well to people. Layout and production skills an advantage.

Salary package of interest to those currently earning around £2,000+ and includes contributory pension and private health schemes.

Apply in writing to:
Barbara Burrows, Editorial Director

AGB
COMMUNICATIONS LIMITED
Clerks Court, 18-20 Farringdon Lane,
London EC4R 3AU

Features Editor The Engineer

Britain's leading weekly magazine for engineering management is to appoint a Features Editor to co-ordinate and plan features coverage across industries as diverse as micro-electronics and offshore construction.

This is a new post, responsible to the Editor. It will involve commissioning topical and relevant feature material from THE ENGINEER'S team of specialist writers and from outside contributors and the preparation of THE ENGINEER'S programme of special reports.

The successful applicant is likely to be a senior journalist with a sound and wide-ranging knowledge of engineering industry. Proven writing ability and the enthusiasm to generate new ideas are essential. THE ENGINEER has achieved a national reputation for the clarity and topicality of its business and technology features.

THE ENGINEER is part of the thriving Morgan-Grampian Group of business and industrial magazines, and is based in modern offices in South East London. The pay and conditions will reflect the importance of this post in the development of THE ENGINEER.

If you think you can fill this challenging job, write to the Editor of THE ENGINEER, John Puller, at 30 Calderwood Street, London SE16 6BH, or telephone him on 01-855 7777.

The Company is an equal opportunities employer

COURSES

3-MONTH INTENSIVE COURSES IN:
ADVANCED TV/POST PRODUCTION TECHNIQUES
Inc. multi-machine video editing, digital special video effects, computer graphics, 1" VTRs, digital video and introduction to satellite/cable TV.

The course prepares for lucrative employment in television. Courses commence 6th May and 30th September 1985.

MEDIA PRODUCTION SERVICES
224-244 King Street, London W6.
Tel: 01-797 7152 (studio)
01-902 6588 (office).

VIDEO PRODUCTION COURSES

3 June - 7 June '85 5 Aug - 9 Aug '85 12 Aug - 16 Aug '85
Four day Video Programme Production Course, inclusive of Full Board and Accommodation. Fully staffed Production Studio. Further courses in October.

£245
For Full Details: Lincolnshire Educational Television,
Bishop Grosseteste College, LINCOLN LN1 3DY
Tel: 0522 44406; 0522 27847, Ext. 721.

U-MATIC

VIDEO COURSES

In Greenwich

4-day courses (and only 4 people per course) in Camerawork, Recording, Lighting, Sound and Editing.

MAY - Tues, 28-Fri, 31 10.00 - Tues, 28-Fri, 30

£195 (plus VAT). Courses always fully booked so don't delay. Write or phone for details.

MEERON PRODUCTIONS (EDUCATION)

22 Bursley Lane

Greenwich, London SE18

Tel: 01-855 5477

FILM-MAKING & VIDEO

TELEVISION PRODUCTION

SHORT COURSES

Comprehensive Programmes in Professional Film & Video TV Production Techniques

One or three weeks duration

1 WEEK FILM COURSES

23 JUNE-29 JUNE

3 WEEKS' FILM COURSE

23 JUNE-12 JULY

1 WEEK VIDEO COURSE

2 JUNE-7 JUNE

CROSS WINDS FILMS LTD

3 SMOKE SQUARE

LONDON W1V 5DE

Telephone: 01-439 1973

150 من المال

In not more than a thousand words describe how this job in IBM is so special.

You could? Brilliant.

You see, there isn't really a title we can give to the person we're looking for. 'Communications Specialist' perhaps. Or 'Publications Co-ordinator'. The words, though, lack weight.

Let us just say that you'll be responsible for a wide range of IBM publications. From the Annual Review (just about the single most important publication within the organisation) to a variety of top-quality brochures and promotional material.

Needless to say, the job is very high-profile indeed. You'll be operating throughout the IBM organisation, travelling up and down the country, working closely with IBM employees at every level.

By background, you'll be a talented writer, with experience of editing. Also, you'll have an eye for design. You'll know how and whom to commission for photography and freelance writing (within precise budgets). You'll have a keen business sense and, hopefully, already be familiar with the computer industry.

Basically you'll have a track record that is impressive. Maybe you hail from a journalistic background, certainly you have a degree. Ideally, you're in your early thirties.

A tall order? It's a big job.

Write to or phone for an application form: Valerie Wits, IBM United Kingdom Limited, PO Box 41, North Harbour, Portsmouth, Hants PO6 3AU. Tel: Portsmouth (0705) 321212 extension 321212.

Please quote ref: G/13703

Banking Technology, Commodore Horizons, Popular Computing Weekly and Satellite Technology

SCOT PRESS LIMITED

SALES CAREER IN ADVERTISING

Scot Press is looking for display and classified advertising staff to join the teams on its weekly and monthly magazines. Advertising sales experience is a distinct advantage. Salary of £7,500 plus generous commission scheme. Please write with full cv to:

Duncan Scot

12-13 Little Newport Street, London WC2H 7PP or ring 01-437 4343 (No agencies please)

Assistant Editor

Builders & Timber Merchant, the UK merchant trade's leading publication, has a requirement for an Assistant Editor. You will be mainly responsible for ensuring that the production of the magazine is handled efficiently and will need all-round experience of reporting, editing, layout, picture work and liaising with suppliers.

To succeed you must be self-motivated, mature and flexible with the ability to handle news, feature and product pages to tight deadlines.

This is an ideal opportunity to become very involved in a small editorial team. This leading specialist business publisher is offering an attractive salary and appropriate large company benefits including contributory pension scheme, subsidised catering and pleasant working conditions in Tonbridge, Kent.

If this is for you, please write with full cv to Geoffrey Smith, Personnel Manager.

Benn Publications Limited

Sovereign Way, Tonbridge

Kent TN9 1RW

MARKETING EXECUTIVE

for a West London business and professional publisher, to be responsible to the Head of Marketing for specific sections of their list, which comprises looseleaf and bound books.

Candidates should have:

1. A background in direct marketing and promotion, not necessarily in the book world.
2. Some experience of print and design-buying.
3. An imaginative approach to marketing problems and possibilities.

A. Numeracy and practical efficiency. Age range: c. 25-35. Salary: negotiable c. £10-£11k plus bonus and the usual benefits. Please write with cv or telephone to Roger Stacey or Deborah Rea at:

ASTRON APPOINTMENTS LIMITED

(Recruitment Consultants)

20-24 Uxbridge Street, London W8 7TA

Tel: 01-229 6423/9171.

EDITORIAL ASSISTANT

Bright, literate, willing...

This is an excellent opportunity for a person, preferably working in a similar capacity, to join an exciting company publishing magazines in the beauty and leisure area. The successful candidate will be required to work on a number of publications and will need to possess proven written skills as well as practical experience of proof reading and editing. She will be working closely with two Editors in a busy office, and will be required to deputise at press functions as well as carry out a wide range of administrative duties including picture research.

Applications in writing, enclosing a full CV, stating current salary, to: Patricia Welch, Editor, JWP Services Ltd, Newcombe House, Notting Hill Gate, W11 3LD.

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT

Salary £5,500 - £8,500

We are seeking an intelligent and versatile person to undertake a range of interesting administrative tasks, including: publications and information / exhibition work. The post would suit a recent graduate interested in developing an independent role in an expanding young company. Relevant work experience an advantage.

For further particulars and application form, telephone 01-235 3494, or write to: The Managing Director, Denton Computers Ltd, 71 Leighton Road, London NW6 6DD.

denton

The Health Care Computer Specialists

Debenham Tewson & Chinnocks, a major firm of Chartered Surveyors and International Real Estate Consultants, wishes to make the following appointment:-

Senior Property Researcher

Experienced senior property researcher, with cognate university qualifications and a demonstrable ability to write well, required to continue established research work in expanding department.

The successful candidate will play a major part in carrying out a combination of client requested research projects as well as increasing the firm's research-based publications.

The position, based in our West End office, will carry a competitive salary commensurate with experience, together with normal fringe benefits associated with a major Practice.

Applications in confidence, by letter, should be sent with a CV to:-

Peter Evans, Head of Research

DEBENHAM TEWSON & CHINNOCKS

Chartered Surveyors

44 Brook Street, London W1V 1TB

01-408 1161

BOURNMOUTH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA & BOURNEMOUTH SINFONETTA

requires a

CONCERT PROMOTIONS OFFICER

You will need plenty of energy and a real commitment to classical music to meet the challenge of this key role in the Marketing and Publicity operation of the Bournemouth Orchestras. As number three in a team of four, you will administer an extensive mailing service and the ordering of printed publicity and tickets. You will supply and develop opportunities for publicity display, visiting concert venues where necessary to build contacts. Organisation of Front-of-House and ticket sales arrangements, also fall within the brief. Car ownership would be an advantage. Salary £5,500, contributory pension scheme.

If you have at least one year's experience in Arts Marketing, and would like to develop your career with two of Britain's finest Orchestras, please write with full cv to:

Director of Administration
WESTERN ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY LIMITED
2 Salmons Lane, Poole, Dorset BH15 1UF

Judy Farquharson Limited

47 New Bond Street, London W1Y 9HA, 01-493 8824

CREATIVE WRITER

To join public affairs department of major international company. Take responsibility for development, design, writing and production of corporate advertising, publications and communications programmes. Candidates should be graduates with about five years experience in newspaper/magazine journalism or PR related activity. Age and 20's, salary to £15,000.

EDITOR/WRITER

Required for a monthly in-house newspaper. The successful candidate will have flair, energy, a keen commercial sense and will be prepared to travel in the UK and possibly abroad. We are keen to interview applicants with a local newspaper and industrial experience and a sound knowledge of subbing and layout. Salary c. £12,000.

JFL

TRANSLATORS

based in the Home Counties and with perfect, fluent Norwegian / Finnish / German or Spanish. Accounting / Computing knowledge essential. Fixed term contracts. Also:

EDITOR

with similar skills for Spanish project.

Apply in person to: Mrs. N. A. Todd, 8 T & B Ltd., Ipswich, Longdene Road, Haslemere, Surrey. Tel: (0428) 53415.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE

Sadler's Wells is to appoint a

DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANT

to work directly with the Development Controller. Stimulating new post involving close attention to detail and background of the Development Appeal. Previous experience in financial institutions an asset, knowledge of ballet and theatre useful but not essential. Ability to deal with people, keep records, type accurately and imaginatively, and to work closely with small team of dedicated people is essential. Full job description and other details available from: Administrator, Sadler's Wells, Rosebery Avenue, London EC1R 4TH. Tel: 01-270 6553. Sadler's Wells is an Equal Opportunities Employer.

CITY OF YORK LEISURE SERVICES

ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS FIELD OFFICER

Scale 3 (£5,622-£5,430)

This is a newly created post in a progressive Leisure Services Department. Duties will be new and the postholder will have an opportunity to develop and maintain a programme of arts and entertainment activities.

The successful applicant will be suitably qualified by education and experience, and will possess the appropriate personal qualities to work without supervision.

For further details of the post and an application form, please write to: Mrs. D. Prosser, Leisure Services Department, The Red House, Dencombe Place, York, or telephone York 0901 ext. 291. The closing date for applications will be 24th May 1985.

NOTTINGHAM FILM THEATRE

is looking for a

CO-ORDINATOR

This new part-time post, initially for a period of one year, is to draw together the activities of the theatre, with special responsibility for programming and development. Salary on scale £4,285-£4,557. For details of application form, contact Graham Nicholls, Nottingham Film Theatre, 16 Broad Street, Nottingham NG1 3AL. Closing date May 15.

adventure

PRACITIONER LIAISON EXEC

Looking for creative people and their social and business schedules. Advise on advertising and media and similar on general level and on specific projects. Ring 01-235 3494

BBC

DESIGN ASSISTANT BBC INFORMATION

Central London £7,271 - £8,729

We are looking for a Designer to join a busy creative team promoting BBC programmes and policies through a wide range of printed material, including leaflets, brochures, posters and displays. Applicants should have a degree in Graphic Design or equivalent, at least 2 years' relevant studio experience, sound typographic ability and a full understanding of print specification. (Ref. 2460/G)

BBC PUBLICATIONS

SENIOR PICTURE RESEARCHER

Central London £8,729 - £10,582

A rare opportunity has arisen for an experienced Picture Researcher to join the team responsible for a wide range of publications which complement the BBC's Radio and Television output. The successful candidate will be responsible for a team of Picture Researchers who service Educational Publications and General books. Duties include the briefing, finding and researching of photographic and archive material, commissioning photography, budgetary control, and copyright clearance. We are looking for someone with a lively, well trained mind, a high level of communication skills, and a ready knowledge of unusual picture and archive sources worldwide. Previous experience of running a picture research department is desirable as is a technical knowledge of photography, printing processes and copyright law. Completed application forms must be returned by Thursday, 9th May. (Ref. 2463/G)

We are an equal opportunities employer

ASSISTANT FILM EDITOR

Birmingham £6,241 - £8,761

To assist Film Editors in all matters relating to film and PSC editing. This includes material for opt-out programmes for the network news and current affairs programmes. Candidates should have experience in handling all types of film in professional cutting rooms and a knowledge of the principles of cinematography. They should also have an interest in electronic editing and the capacity to develop a professional approach to film work. Normal colour vision is also essential. (Ref. 1372/G)

RadioTimes

ASSISTANT ART EDITOR

Central London £11,982 - £14,504

To be responsible for the planning and commissioning of artwork for Radio Times feature and programme pages. Education to degree standard in Graphic Design or equivalent experience, preferably in an editorial capacity on a newspaper or magazine of national standing, is essential. Previous experience in the supervision of staff, the administration of budgets and of commissioning artists and photographers would be an advantage. (Ref. 2435/G)

Salaries currently under review. Relocation expenses considered. Contact us immediately for application form (quote appropriate ref. and enclose s.a.e.): BBC Appointments, London W1A 1AA. Tel. 01-927 5799.

CHIEF EXECUTIVE'S DEPARTMENT

Promotions & Community Relations Unit

Two Press and Information Officers

(SO1) - £9,477-£10,107

The City of Birmingham is expanding its promotional activities and has recently strengthened its Press Office. We are seeking two creative and energetic Press and Information Officers to join a team of eight.

Major duties will include writing and editing copy for internal and external publication, preparing press releases, liaising with the media. Experience of creative writing is essential as is experience in a similar role.

Candidates may obtain application forms (returnable by 18 May 1985) and further particulars from Personnel Section, Chief Executive's Department, Council House, Birmingham, B1 1BB.

Quote ref: 13/615.

Canvassing will disqualify.

An Equal Opportunities Employer.

BIRMINGHAM CITY COUNCIL

TOWN CLERK'S DEPARTMENT

PUBLIC RELATIONS SECTION

Publications Officer

[PO1 (£10,716/£11,562)]

The Publications, Promotions and Design Unit provides a comprehensive service for all City Council departments on matters relating to exhibitions, publications, audio-visual presentations, promotional campaigns, conferences and special events. It also advises on a wide range of publicity and promotional issues and provides a complete creative design service.

The ideal candidate for this post will have experience in all of these fields and will be able to supervise the work of the Graphic Designers and the Exhibitions and Audio-Visual Unit. The successful applicant will, however, be expected to devote a considerable amount of time to devising and organising various promotional events.

The structure of the Public Relations Section is at present under review and it is possible that as a result of that review, there will be a revised management structure for the Unit and that the precise duties of this post may be varied.

Applications, by letter, giving all relevant particulars, together with the names and addresses of two referees, should be sent to the Staff Officer, Town Clerk's Department, PO Box 332, Town Hall, Manchester M60 2LA, to be received not later than 13th May, 1985.

The City Council operates a Union Membership agreement under which a new employee is required to become a member of a recognised Union.

MANCHESTER City Council

Manchester City Council is an Equal Opportunity Employer, and we positively welcome applications from women and men, regardless of their race, ethnic or national origin, disability, sex, sexuality or responsibilities for dependants.

AUSTRALIANS GO HOME

Because if you do there is a once in a lifetime opportunity to be in the beginning when a new high quality weekly newspaper is launched for the burgeoning Australian computer industry.

Starting July there are vacancies for top quality reporters in both Sydney and Melbourne. The brief is to write excitingly and interestingly about the computer business and the wider implications of technology.

The task should appeal to fairly experienced journalists, who, when they return home, can see the appeal of covering what is rapidly becoming a major industry in Australia.

Interested? Then write a long and articulate letter to George Littlejohn, VNU Business Publications, 65, Oxford Street, London W1A 2BG.

ADVERTISING ASSISTANT

Amazing career opportunity with the U.K.'s fastest growing magazine publishing company. Would you enjoy working to tight schedules and would you revel in being a key member in a dynamic advertising environment? Good organisation, fast accurate typing and the ability to show initiative is essential, as well as liaising with clients and major advertising agencies. Experience not necessary but helpful. We are a young Company and offer an attractive salary - neg. 5 weeks' paid holiday, Lunchtime Vouchers, and all the benefits of a large successful public company. Excellent opportunity for a person with a career in mind.

Contact John Peggall now on 01-430 1200.

emap

INTERNATIONAL MARKETING LTD

EDITORIAL ASSISTANT

For small, busy editorial / design / print production team in travel business. Trainee or some experience. English 'A' level or degree; fast, accurate typing essential. Apply in writing, with CV, to Aviation Marketing Services, 38 Grosvenor Gardens, London SW1W 0ES.

CITY OF SWANSEA CHIEF EXECUTIVE AND TOWN CLERK'S DEPARTMENT

GRAND THEATRE ASSISTANT MARKETING OFFICER

Spec. 35 £5,597-£5,799 per annum

Responsible for assisting the Marketing Officer in the preparation and distribution of publicity material as well as liaising with agencies and the public and assisting in Front-of-House duties. The post will suit a good communicator with an enthusiastic and fresh approach. The Grand Theatre is at the moment undergoing major re-organisation and the successful candidate will be expected to make a positive contribution to the development of the Theatre. Flexible working hours are an integral part of the position.

Please note that the City Council operates a Union Membership Agreement. Closing date 17.5.85. Further details and application forms obtainable from the Director of Administration, Room 217, The Guildhall, Swansea. Telephone: 0782 0021 ext. 5215.

SCOTTISH AND NORTHERN BOOK DISTRIBUTION CO-OPERATIVE LTD

16 Granby Row Manchester M1 3JG

01-228 3902

need TWO WORKERS for our Manchester office. We are a collectively-run workers' co-op representing and distributing a wide range of radical publications. The salary for 4 days per week is approx. £74.00 net. We welcome applications from black women and men. Contact us for job description, and reply by 7th May 1985.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

LONDON 01-278 2332

MANCHESTER 061-832 7200

Summer Jobs Abroad

FRENCH, GERMAN AND SPANISH SPEAKING

French-speaking young people invited to work immediately on European camp sites as REPRESENTATIVES for the United Kingdom Testing Camps and Caravanning Company. For an application form please telephone Custer Department on 01-235 3494.

Eurocamp

TRAINEE TRAVEL TO THE TOP OF THE TREE

Various of the Managing Directors of the Publishing Companies got there through selling advertising space, rather than through advertising. So if you're 20-25, educated, lively, talkative, ambitious then ring Richard to discuss a career in Advertising Sales.

Starting salaries around a £7,000 + Commission London. Tel: 01-235 3494. CARRIERS LADWIRE ASSOCIATES (REG CONS)

ARTS DEVELOPMENT WORKER

For Oxford House Community Centre

to continue development, co-ordination and fund-raising for its Community Arts Programme. £2,772 p.a. LW inc. GLC funded to 30-9-85. Applications to March 1985 pending. Send s.e. for details to Odell House, Derbyshire Street, London E2 6HG. Closing date 20 May 1985.

INTERIOR DESIGNER/SPACE PLANNER

HOUSEHOLD, £3,200 p.a.

Office Interior Planning from layout drawings to on-site supervision.

WGS to £10,000 p.a. Creative sales consultant dealing with high performance office furniture systems.

Tel: 01-525 6364 (94 hours) 1 Wilton Road, SW1V 1AR

Montrose Design Staff

AGENT

Small literary agency, specialising in TV, radio, theatre, is looking for an with own clients with a view to possible expansion. Please reply to: EW 197 The Guardian

I could be a Production Assistant... Director...

Writer... Art Buyer... Designer...

if I read 'Creative and Media' jobs in The Guardian

every Monday

YOU CAN FIND IT IN THE

GUARDIAN

THE FUTURE BUILDERS: A three part study of the architects of tomorrow by MARTIN PAWLEY

LAST autumn the Technology Assessment Board of the United States Congress—equivalent to an all-party House of Commons committee—listened to a presentation on the subject of the future of the construction industry. The speaker was delivered by Harry Mileaf, a director of McGraw-Hill Information Systems and chairman of the 4,000-member US Coordinating Council for Computers in Construction. What Mileaf told Congress was rather like what Ian MacGregor told Arthur Scargill—only the subject was not the future of unemployment pits, but the future of the profession of architecture.

Putting it bluntly, Mileaf predicted that four-fifths of the 80,000 practising architects in the United States would be "dislocated" by the year 2000. "Construction design is highly labour-intensive," Mileaf explained. "Producing architectural drawings now accounts for half of all design costs for new buildings. Within 15 years, computer-aided design systems will have automated the drawing process, product specification and cost estimating."

This gloomy news was only perfunctorily reported in British architectural journals. There were after all more urgent matters: the bi-annual election for the presidency of the institute; the plan to cut graduate enrolments in 30 schools of architecture; and the resignation of two members of staff from a major practice involved in design work related to the Trident missile programme.

Predictions of extinction for their species are no new thing to Britain's 26,000 architects, who have now voted in their own form of zero population growth to cut future competition for a dwindling order-book of new construction work. On a scale of one to ten, the computer threat hardly makes the list at all.

The real problems that occupy their minds are defects in liability claims relating to work they did years ago, fee-bargaining that can drive them into bankruptcy, the ravages of the Byzantine building control bureaucracy, undiminished public and media unpopularity, and falling real incomes which last year averaged only £13,500—a sum easily matched by any self-respecting double glazing salesman.

Architects are too worried about the present to have much time to think about the future, and this is unusual for a profession that a scant 20 years ago spoke enthusiastically about a 21st century architecture of prefabricated pods, capsules, megastructures and settlements in outer space. The change came with two terrible blows that architects suffered in the 1970s: the energy crisis that pulled the rug from under the massive publicly-financed housing, hospital, school and university programmes upon which most of those in established practice today cut their teeth; and the related, but still not clearly understood, revulsion against modern architecture that swept the Western world in its aftermath.

Today architects are shattered and lacking in confidence; their old modern ideology—the "New Worldism" that was so self-evidently good that it hardly needed describing—has, by a trick of cunning, politicians, been thrown back in their faces. The disintegration of the public estate—a simply result of the 90 per cent cut in real spending that has taken place since 1979—is now blamed on them. In effect the profession is in disgrace for having tried to build 500,000 houses a year.

But it is one thing to be in disgrace and quite another to become extinct. Like politicians out of office, the most thoughtful of today's architects lie in wait for changing times. Even as a multitude of critics heap ordure on their heads they know that their art—the design of buildings—exercises a powerful fascination. Far more powerful today than when a dozen new towns were under construction and a new city—Milton Keynes—was aimed enthusiastically at the 21st century.

The "Green Giant," the "Carbuncle" and the "Glass Stump" have entered into the public consciousness with a force unequalled since the great Coventry Cathedral

HELLA PICK reports from Warsaw on the regal visitor from Moscow

Irony in the soul

POLAND'S outlawed trade union does not own the copyright, even in its own country, to the word "Solidarity". On Saturday a tape recorder on Lech Walesa's telephone in Gdansk was relaying a message to the effect that the ideals of Solidarity, the trade union, must be kept alive as a beacon towards fundamental reform in Poland.

Yet simultaneously, Polish television was broadcasting the Soviet Leader, Mr Mikhail Gorbachev's promise of "invariable and constant solidarity" with "the Polish party's efforts to overcome the consequences of the crisis" caused, among other factors, by the sprouting of the Solidarity trade union in 1980.

General Jaruzelski, still in civilian dress, abandoned his stiff demeanour to smile and wave as Mr Gorbachev beamed at him from the airport on Saturday afternoon. After half a day's intensive talks with General Jaruzelski, the Polish leadership had apparently obtained a nod of approval from the new broom in the Kremlin.

Poland obviously needs more energy, raw materials and overall economic support from the Soviet Union. With Mr Gorbachev anxious to streamline the Soviet economy, General Jaruzelski has very likely been encouraged to push harder for the implementation of a present moribund, economic reforms.

Mr Gorbachev, probably choosing his words carefully, stressed his support for Poland's Communist Party rather than referring to the regime itself. Yet the Polish party is in deep decline and nobody has yet found a way to generate new dynamism amongst party loyalists, let alone how to win wider public support for the party.

The Polish church is the major beneficiary of the popular weariness with party propaganda and of the erosion of Solidarity, the trade union, as a rallying point for national enthusiasm. General Jaruzelski recently told visiting American journalists of his frustrations with the church.

Being a Pole, he knows that the church cannot be ignored and reduced to impotence, as Lech Walesa has been.

But does the Soviet leader also know this fact of Polish life?

Last Friday the Warsaw Pact Treaty was extended by a minimum of 20 years, and a possible 30 years. But neither Mr Gorbachev's published speech on the occasion, nor his declaration of solidarity with the Polish Communist Party, have offered any firm guidance on the length of the leash which the new Soviet leader intends to give to the Soviet Union's dependencies in eastern Europe.

Even the other Warsaw Pact leaders themselves must have seen the irony of Mr Gorbachev's remark that "History has known no other alliance like ours, in which relations are based on full equality and friendly neutral assistance of sovereign states."

Already, the few glimpses of the Warsaw Pact leaders afforded to the public emphasised the regal aura that surrounds Mr Gorbachev wherever he went. He was transported in huge Zils cars nine of which were brought in specially from the Soviet Union and alone was housed in Vilnius Palace.

From the accounts of those who met him here Mr Gorbachev applied the same kind of erudite charm that disarmed Mrs Thatcher. But nobody here doubts that there is steel and ruthless determination behind the facade. He is most unlikely to sag under the kind of free-wheeling debate in the Warsaw Pact, which he is doing his utmost to promote in Nato.

The only published declaration by Mr Gorbachev at Friday's summit had nothing to say on the role of the other Warsaw Pact countries. Instead concentrating almost entirely on East-West relations. The Kremlin is apparently refusing to negotiate nuclear arms reductions unless the United States abandons the development of space weapons.

The other Warsaw Pact countries are profoundly unhappy over the tense relationship between the superpowers. At Friday's summit there seems to have been some attempt to express these concerns to Mr Gorbachev.

Mr Gorbachev's published address to the Warsaw Pact leaders gave no firm clue as to his response. There was a warning to the West that the Warsaw Pact would have to strengthen its organisation if Western "aggressive tendencies" continued. But there were none of the customary admonitions to the bloc for unity and cohesion.

This could be a reflection of greater dissonance than was apparent from the affable family picture taken of the summiteers. Or it could simply mean that Mr Gorbachev wants more time before defining his policies towards his "equals" in the Warsaw Pact.

Lambeth Community Care Centre, picture by Robin Nicholson (left); Ted Cullinan outside his house in Camden, picture by Roger Tooth (right).

Day one: Ted Cullinan believes that the key to successful design lies in exhaustive consultation with the people who will use the building

A joy for the maker and the user

IN 1964, when he was a 22-year-old student at the Architectural Association in London, Ted Cullinan's father took a 99-year lease on a war-damaged lighthouse on the edge of the South Downs. In the next two years, Ted worked on the conversion of the small building into a house and found the process a source of inspiration, partly through the physical pleasure of it, and partly because the slowness of it all gave him time to ponder the junction of material with material; a release, as he was later to write, from any other life as an architect who works for clients' deals with governments, and builds to deadlines.

Thirty years later Cullinan has become an architect with a work ethic so exclusive that it has become legendary. And the force of the legend is so great that, although his office is run on the egalitarian lines of a Mondragón co-operative, he has attracted not only the praise of the Prince of Wales, but a commission to design new gates for the main entrance to Kensington Palace.

Cullinan specialises in social architecture based on exhaustive consultation with clients who are also building users. His 550,000 rebuilding of the parish church of Barnes, destroyed by fire in 1978, involved 300 meetings with representatives of the congregation, church authorities, local authorities and other interested parties. The result was a church redesign whose cost in time and labour was so great that the six-year gestation of the parish church involved him in a loss that was, dare I say it, made good when his practice won this year's £10,000 International Design award for the much-praised result.

In defiance of the accepted commercial measures of success or failure is printed through Cullinan's approach to architecture from his own boudoir sweatshirt, to his office. Hidden in a converted warehouse reached from a service yard in a Camden backstreet, it can only be entered by passing through an archway late 20th century urban wasteland as remote from the sweeping isolation of the Bell Turret lighthouse as its mode of operation from the management principles of the Duchy of Cornwall.

"We don't hold with the view that a job won't pay if you can't pay assistants because we don't have assistants," he explains flatly. "We share the money out, when and if it comes in, on a three-to-one ratio; nobody gets more than three times as much as anyone else."

"When all our ages were closer, we used to work on a two-to-one basis, but your ages range from 20 to 50 or 60 it goes up to three-to-one. It's the same as a Mondragón co-operative, they make washing machines that way."

Ted Cullinan's cooperative employs a changing number of architects and assistants, but seldom more than 15. The main entrance door is heavily protected and there is an alarming notice about the danger of leaving it open because of "Bomber"—who sneaks out to be a dog.

The office interior, on two floors, has all the carefree disarray of a musician's rehearsal room where shift-work means that nothing ever really gets cleared away. Only superimposed on everything else, year after year, upstairs is a score of drawing boards, perhaps half of them in use; downstairs a conference room bere of luxury or facilities except chairs and a solid table upon which much has been spilt including, possibly, blood—for in architecture feelings can run high.

Cullinan is convinced that deep and prolonged consultation with building users will grow into an indispensable part of the architectural practice of the future, no matter how uncertain it is at present.

"Over the next 30 years everyone is going to have to come to terms with a continuing increase in popular awareness of how things work. It is often said of England that we have peculiarly swift industrial relations. I would say that, on the contrary, we have a very well-informed working public with an information-gathering history of working with its hands."

My favourite quotation on the whole question comes from William Morris who said in a lecture called The Arts of the People; Meanwhile if these hours are dark do not let us sit deadlike like fools and fine gentlemen. Rather let us put our workshop in order against that great day when there is an art made by the people and for the people as a joy for the maker and the user.

"That may sound incredibly romantic but it is exactly what I think should happen. There is an unstoppable increase in ordinary people's knowledge and, in the next century, they will demand—and they will get—a say in the architecture that is presented to them and the money that is spent on it."

"This has already happened with the design of machines, like aeroplanes and cars. Do you remember how cars used to be designed in the 1930s? They were complete style jobs and I don't think they are like that any more. I think that Which and Consumer Reports and the whole consumer movement radically changed their nature."

"The presses of the industry are no longer used to stamp out wonderfully silly, motors and people do nowadays have a much greater knowledge of the design and efficiency of cars. The general public understands cars much better than it understands buildings."

"At Lambeth Community Care Centre I don't know how many meetings we have had with the doctors and nurses and administrators. I think it is something like 120 in three years. We don't charge for these meetings because they happen in the evenings. You just go and chat about the subject you love with lots of people."

"In Lambeth they had an idea for the first cottage hospital to be designed in London since the war. When they got the money from the Inner-City Fund and the National Health Service they chose us as architects although we were not on the NHS list because we understood that an institution begins to decline from the moment when it designs premises especially for itself."

"It happens because of the solidifying effect of brief-writing when you ask every person in every department to say what he wants and he looks at what he's got put walls around it, and adds 50 per cent. That way you don't get a more open and fluid situation, you get a larger and more closed situation, solidifying all the problems you had before."

"We attended three or four meetings, looked at some other health care buildings and then went straight in and produced a scheme. Which is fantastic, because if you put on the table in front of 7 people a complete project, they will immediately spot what's right and what's wrong in the places that relate to them on the plan. And the occupational therapist and physiotherapist will say, for the first time, 'Oh, we can share this bit, but not this bit, because this is where people address.'"

"Then they push it about and we produce, I don't know, 10 or 15 alternative schemes. Absolutely without circulation diagrams or analyses of user needs or anything like that. I always tell students that anyone can do one of those things in an afternoon. The problem of architecture concerns the bits that it's made of, the quality of the place, and what it looks like and feels like."

The problem with Cullinan's method to an outsider is not only the exhaustive quantity of time and energy it requires, but the nagging fear that he is sacrificing in the process of consultation the power of design that is the heart of architecture. Consultation may well dominate the design of buildings in the 21st century, but

Ken Livingstone may survive but the clash with central government has left its scars, writes JOHN CARVEL

The cost to the town halls in the battle of the budgets

MR KEN LIVINGSTONE yesterday succeeded in securing the parliamentary nomination for Brent East in spite of what he had described as a severe dose of the "political clap."

His uncertain handling of the GLC budget last month, culminating in a very public retreat from the tactic of refusing to set a rate, deprived him of any residual backing from ultra-left groups which he had meekly straddled over recent years. But his support among the unaligned broad left held good. He is the man which the rate-capping crisis did not quite get.

Others have been less fortunate. The issue has caused the resignation of Mr George Meenan, leader of Haringey, who felt obliged to step down earlier this month when he could no longer support continued refusal to set a rate.

Mr Ron Stockbridge resigned as leader of Lewisham following a bizarre council meeting at which Opposition Tories passed a legal rate while the Labour group was absent from the council chamber trying to organise its retreat.

Mr Tony Ritchie, leader of Southwark, collapsed last week as his group headed towards a similar climb-down. Colleagues thought he had had a heart attack, but the doctors have diagnosed severe nervous exhaustion.

Among the urban left in the rate-capped areas, scores of political reputations (and parliamentary ambitions) have been put at risk as the issue separated out pragmatic sheep from ideological goats. A generation of young Labour councillors, brought up to believe that socialism had been betrayed by over-pliable party leaders, have been forced to review their perspectives.

This weekend, perhaps the biggest test of all got under way at Labour party meetings in Sheffield. Mr David Blunkett, the council leader, is a member of Labour's National Executive, chairman of the campaign group of rebel councils, one of the most promising politicians of his generation and a hopeful for the safe Parliamentary seat of Sheffield Brightside. The next few days will decide whether or not his local party will require him to sacrifice himself in a pitched battle with the Government or whether he will be directed towards continuing a less ambitious but more sustainable guerrilla campaign.

The decision in Sheffield is pivotal to the future of the whole rate-capping struggle. The issue at stake is whether the majority Labour group on the council should agree to fix a legal rate and run a potentially deficit budget to avoid cuts in jobs and services, or whether it should stage an "all or bust" confrontation with the Government by committing an outright act of flagrant municipal illegality.

Five times over the last two months, Mr Blunkett kept his disparate Labour group on the council united behind resolutions to defer making a rate. The feeling has been betrayed by over-pliable party leaders, have been forced to review their perspectives.

The deferred-rate tactic was originally developed by Mr Ted Knight of Lambeth and other south London borough leaders. In the absence of any coherent alternative, it was accepted last summer by the Association of London Authorities which persuaded the Government to back it at a Labour local government conference last July. The tactic then got the support of the Blackpool party conference and even sporadic endorsement from the Parliamentary leadership.

The aim was to mobilise public opinion against the "anti-democratic" nature of Government laws to force through spending cuts and to oblige ministers to negotiate a settlement.

The campaign had some initial success. Throughout last autumn and winter the 16 Labour rate-capped authorities maintained a remarkably united front. They refused to use the ap-proposals machinery in the rate-capping legislation on the grounds that this would accept the principle of the new system, would allow Mr Jenkins to impose conditions on their future spending and might enable him to sow division by offering appealing deals to some councils, leaving others in the lurch.

The councils mobilised support from the trade unions and their communities. Recent opinion polls suggest they have awakened strong local antagonism against central government's attempts to cut spending. Their campaign reached a high point in the spring when Mr Jenkins went through boroughs at the dispatch box to escape demands for an explanation of how his rate-capping figures were calculated.

It never looked likely, however, that the Government would give in. Following the collapse of the miners' strike and the GLC's chaotic climb-down, the possibility of serious concessions became remote. One by one most councils have felt obliged to abandon the no-rate tactic, leaving only Sheffield, Luton, Greenwich, Hackney, Islington, and Lambeth still maintaining their stance. (If Southwark ever comes to itself to remain on this list, it is only because local union activists physically prevented the council meeting to fix a rate on Friday.)

Labour councillors in these areas are already at considerable personal risk. Liverpool is financially strung because it is continuing to receive full Government grant and instalment payments from last year's (rate) rate. The London councils are getting "stress borough" payments from the GLC to help their cash flow.

But in most cases, councillors have probably passed the point where the district auditor could claim the authorities are suffering financial loss because of "wilful misconduct" in failing to make a rate. They are at risk of surcharge and disqualification.

Labour leaders, such as Mrs Margaret Hodge of Islington, use this position of plight as evidence that the councils have not been a matter of idle political posturing. Who would have thought, she asks, that so many councils would come to this? In truth the Government has called the councils' bluff and most of the leaders are soldiering on for want of an acceptable fallback position.

They are being left to stew by Mr Jenkins, whose performance on this issue over the last two months has gone some way to restore his dented reputation. He has broken normal parliamentary etiquette by retaining the shadow Environment Secretary, Dr John Gummer, the opportunity to bring in a deputation which the Government fears would give the councils hope. In the High Court, Mr Justice Woolf has given Hackney until the end of May to comply with the law, demonstrating that the judiciary is reluctant to get involved. Auditors have issued warnings, but do not intend to initiate surcharge actions until they are absolutely sure of winning them.

The Sheffield city Labour Party initiative is designed to break this impasse. Mr Blunkett has made it clear that he will drape himself over the barbed wire of surcharge and disqualification if the party decides this is the only way for the troops to advance. But he has also given coded signals that he thinks the time is right to fix a rate and work within it to avoid cuts in jobs and services.

Rate-capping, like painting the Forth Bridge, is a process which begins at one end and soon as it is finished at the other. The Government is preparing to announce in July the arrangements for the second year of rate-capping which will begin in April 1986. There are important questions for both sides.

Councils mobilised popular support against the first year of rate-capping by suggesting that it would cause intolerable cuts in services. Yet almost all the authorities which have fixed a legal rate now seem to be getting through the year without making real cuts. With local people believe them when they (more honestly) claim that the second year of rate-capping will bite hard? Or will they, like the little boy who cried wolf, lose popular sympathy when the real crunch comes?

For the Government the outlook is equally uncertain. Mr Jenkins must by now have learned that local authorities' accounts are amazingly elastic. How can he fix exactly the right rate limit for 1986-87 to secure the cuts he wants without causing the elastic to break and snap back in his face?

David Blunkett: faced with a pivotal decision

How an unhappy wife and mother became a nun, found favour with God and was promoted to patron saint of the impossible

Polly Toynbee

AN opinion poll of Italian Catholics has just revealed, to the amazement of many, that the Virgin Mary has been ousted for the first time from her place as the most popular saint. At the top of the poll instead came Saint Rita of Cascia. Who is Saint Rita, and why has she supplanted the Virgin?

Almost every church in Italy has a statue, a picture or a shrine to St Rita. In Italy last year I noticed time and again a cluster of women praying intensely at her altars for St Rita's intercession in their time of trouble and unhappiness.

One of her prayers reads: "At this critical stage in my life, being so mercilessly surrounded, my heart is alleviated and enlivened. My Saint, I am sure that you will obtain for me from our beloved Jesus the intercession I have asked. Please, virtuous Rita, save me by the grace of your sufferings in your married life."

For Saint Rita is the patron saint of women suffering from misery of cruel and brutal husbands. She is listed as a saint of the impossible, a helper of desperate cases.

I turned to the various dictionaries of saints. They make it clear that there is very little contemporary authentication of her story. Born in 1377 in Umbria, she died in 1447, but the first written story of her life was not compiled until around 1600, from the oral tradition surrounding her cult.

The cottings library of The Universe, the Catholic newspaper, is a remarkable place. In the file of St Rita there were yellowed cuttings, going back to the day of her canonisation in 1900. The Roman letter from "our own correspondent" describes the splendour of the great ceremony at a leisurely and delightfully purple pace.

Tucked away in the file was a devotional life of Saint Rita, together with a little envelope containing dried rose petals and instructions for their use: "Blessed Roses of St Rita. First dry the petals. The fragments may then be taken for nine days, either in water or mixed with food. One Pater, Ave, and Gloria with the invocation, 'St Rita, Patroness of the impossible, pray for us' should be recited each day."

The booklet tells of her life: her parents "though very poor, were pious and kind. They lived by and for the love of God, drawing patience and fortitude from the abundance of the crucified." For many years they had no children but her mother "would not cease her prayers for a little one to enlighten their hard and weary lives." At the age of 53 God sent his angel to announce that from her a great woman will arise. The infant would be called Margherita, later shortened to Rita.

"Hardly a week had passed after her birth when miracles began to occur: while working in the fields, the peasant parents left the infant Rita under a big sandy tree. A cluster of bees came over her, and big ones landed in her mouth, and poured honey into it without even stinging her."

A peasant who had cut his hand harvesting chased the bees away and found his wound miraculously cured.

"At the age of seven the rays of virtue were shining in her spirit. She was submissive, completely obedient and satisfied with delicate delicacy... Young Rita heard how St Francis participated in the sufferings of Christ Crucified. She asked to be called to the cross, or at least to suffer with Jesus his most painful wounds."

"Her soul throbbled with infatuation for God. She yearned for the monastic life. However, the Almighty desired that she ascend the way to Calvary first." Which is another way of saying she was destined for marriage.

Her parents chose for her a "cruel and sinful husband. He poured his furious anger on poor Rita. He slandered and beat her." She had prayed to God not to be made to marry him, but "God wanted her to be a symbol for martyred wives."

She bore two sons. The family was involved in the bitter feuds of the times and her husband was killed in one of these. "Rita's grievance on the murder of her husband didn't forbid her heavenly nature from forgiving the killer."

Her sons, though, swore their revenge. She was so anxious for the sake of their souls that they should not commit murder themselves that she prayed that God would take their lives. "God granted her prayers and her two sons died of illness, one after the other. Rita was now alone in the world, united only with her God; at last she was free!"

Rita entered an Augustinian priory, after making several unsuccessful applications, since at the time they admitted only virgins. There she flogged herself three times a day and wore clothes of pigskin. One day, praying in front of a crucifix, asking to share Christ's suffering, her wish was granted and a thorn flew off the cross and embedded itself in her forehead. The suppurating wound stayed with her all her life, and smelled so terrible that she lived apart from the other nuns.

Shortly before her death, she called for roses in the middle of winter, and some were found in her garden. She called for figs and two were found on a leafless tree. Angels rang the convent bells when she died, and her wound was found to have been replaced by a glowing ruby. Her body was found uncorrupted many years later, and now her skeleton is on display at her shrine at Cascia, with a hole in the skull marking her stigmata.

In England, the centre for St Rita worship is St Rita's College, a seminary in Houlton in Devon, where every year a novena — nine days of prayer — is held leading up to her saint's day, May 22. Advertisements are currently displayed in the Catholic press for this event.

D. H. Farmer, compiler of the Oxford Book of Saints, comments about her cult, somewhat wryly: "The supply of unsatisfactory husbands has not diminished over the centuries, and it may well explain her popularity."

The politics of St Rita's late canonisation are interesting. Although she was already the Blessed Rita, and venerated as a saint, information about her was less than reliable. Her cult drew the common people — mainly women, and not the learned, which made the Vatican reluctant. The text quoted above firmly says she was illiterate and knew only the Bible.

By 1900 it was apparent that her cult was immensely popular. It appears that at the time the Vatican may have been anxious to provide a model wife, and to shore up the sanctity of marriage. A saint who earned a place in heaven through tolerating a monstrous husband was an encouragement to similarly afflicted women who might consider abandoning the struggle, battered wives could be urged to find spiritual joy in their suffering.

However, the lessons to be drawn from the lives of the saints change with the fashions of the times. Brother Cyril Coughlan of the Austin Friars in Hammersmith, recently back from working in the headquarters of the Augustinians in Rome, was reading through the final approved text of a new Life of St Rita. It is to be published by the Catholic Truth Society.

He explained that the worship of saints had changed greatly since the Second Vatican Council discouraged the old devotion to saints.

But recently, perhaps under the influence of the present Pope, he says there has been a marked return to the saints. "People are looking at the example and asking for the intercession of the saints, but in a new way."

What is fascinating about the new Life of St Rita, is that it turns the old story entirely on its head, and finds a whole new purpose for Rita as a model. This tract stresses how little is really known, how slender the contemporary evidence is, but nevertheless goes on to draw out a whole new picture of her life. Surprisingly, it denies that her husband was a wicked man at all. Rita, exemplar of wifely tolerance, has gone.

Instead there is a new version of Rita as peace-maker in a troubled world. For she apparently attempted to make peace between the feuding factions in the Cascia of her day. A fact entirely omitted from the earlier pamphlet quoted above. According to this new version, her holiness came from her life in the convent, and the pain of her stigmata, and not from her cruel husband.

It seems doubtful that this new vision of St Rita will catch on. There are, after all, plenty of holy contemplative nuns to choose from among the saints. As Brother Cyril says: "Her appeal is that she is so human and real, not a plaster saint. People can easily understand the suffering she went through and the difficulties she had in her life, perhaps particularly people with unhappy marriages."

It is not hard to understand why the Virgin Mary has been supplanted. For virgin motherhood was always a puzzling ideal to aim at. Surviving insufferable husbands may be a cause a little closer to the ordinary lives of Catholic women.

At the end of the Life of St Rita sent out by St Rita's Press in Houlton, there is an indulgence prayer officially decreed to grant 300 days off purgatory to all who devoutly recite this prayer in honour of St Rita of Cascia once a day:

"O Glorious Rita, who didst miraculously participate in the sorrowful Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, obtain for me the grace to suffer with resignation the troubles of this life, and protect me in all my needs. Amen."

St Rita, as seen in St Peter's Italian Church, London. Picture by Martin Argyle

The women who found a voice in Africa Naomi Mitchison reports from Botswana

IT WAS NOT such a long struggle in Botswana as it has been in many other countries, including our own. No professions are closed to women and there is quite a long tradition of women doctors. Voting when it came for all citizens, though that of course does not stop a woman voter waiting to see what her husband thinks, something not unknown nearer home.

Primary school teachers are mostly women, including the heads of schools which may have up to a thousand pupils. But discipline is on the whole easy; most children want to go to school, and in these years of drought and shortage school may be the place where at least you get one good meal of porridge and milk.

There are many women teachers in secondary schools all over the country, but not many heads. A few are in the inspectorate. Most of the responsible teachers are likely to be married, often with quite large families. There are still far too many young unqualified teachers, mostly girls, but with the present policy of getting everyone into some kind of school at some time, it seems likely to go on.

There are plenty of women lawyers and a great many in business. One of the few farmers employing staff to deal with cattle and crops. When it comes to the civil service, there are of course hundreds of secretaries at all levels. Any girl who gets a Junior Certificate, but probably stops there, is likely to see herself in an office job, perhaps in local government.

An increasing number of women are being elected to local bodies; they give their opinions and they are respected. It seems that some men on local bodies who had lapsed into inefficiency or small scale corruption, but expected to be re-elected because they had always been, are being supplanted by sensible and honest women who are taking the job, whatever it is, seriously.

All this has happened in a short time. I remember, more than twenty years ago when Kgosi Luthwile II of the Bakgatla, said to me shortly before his instalment "They — (the Tribal Council) — laughed at me when I said that the women should come to the meetings. They won't laugh when I am Chief." And so it happened and the women came, at first saying little, then gradually taking to speaking and voting, unhindered by the babies on their backs, who seemed to take it too. He went on to make changes in tribal law and custom, all to help the women.

But of course it is easier to change laws than to change attitudes. A pregnant school girl can go to the District Commissioner and complain; he says "Bring the boy." But the boy has conveniently disappeared. The baby is born; the boy says "It is not mine" and the girl is left with her life spoiled. Usually her husband agrees to take the baby, even if she has one on her own to look after, but some girls may have nobody to turn to.

Girls are afraid to go to the clinic (State approved) if they are under sixteen and must go with a parent. Many mothers get furious and accuse their daughters of trying to be bad women, when the poor girl is only looking for protection from fellow pupils and male teachers. I fear there are mothers like that in our own country and our new law may bring the same misery. What is needed in both countries is to increase the boys' sense of responsibility. But how?

To go back to figures: the percentage of women in the Botswana National Assembly is considerably higher than in our House of Commons. Among the Ministers, the one who is probably the most well respected is Miss Chiepe. She is a Kalanga and they occupy about the same position as the Scots did in England some five generations back; that is to say they are keen upward movers, but not unnaturally incur some criticism in a country which considers itself firmly united.

Among my women friends one is President of the Botswana Co-operative Bank and member of a very important parastatal Board. I think this is less unusual here in Botswana than it is so far in Britain. However, her real hard-working position is as Matron-in-Chief for Southern Botswana, including the whole nursing service, no light work.

Others run various businesses or are in Government service. But this is the top layer of society. There are still many women of the older generation who got little or no education, the ordinary housewives, who, if they have any other occupation, perhaps run a shebeen. But they were also the ones who knew what wild plants were good for food or domestic medicine. They rushed out to get "pinch" as soon as the rains brought a small crop. Giving this to the children probably accounts for the comparatively few cases of xerophthalmia in Botswana.

But if one generation knows thirty plants or berries, the next generation knows only twenty, and so it goes. Those older women planted their crops, different kinds of beans and roots or herbs on the edges of sorghum or maize fields. That was in the days of hand sowing. Now that all crops are drilled by men and machines, there is no room for the women's crops.

There is little trade for women potters; enamel bowls and pails are so much lighter to carry. Fewer baskets are made and the drought has made it very hard to find the right grasses. Some aspects of life are impoverished. But more babies survive and children here are much loved and, because of that, well behaved. In the days of polygamy or when wives went back to their parents to have and nurse the baby, there was some spacing of births; this no longer happens.

In a big family grandmothers and aunts help, but in farming-time wives customarily go with their husbands to the lands, often leaving five or six year olds at school, but living rather precariously with older siblings or relations. It certainly isn't an easy life. But I doubt if any specific "women's liberation" movement from on top will change it. The change will come as the whole nation changes, battling, for good or ill, to red its place in the sometimes cruel modern world.

Vanity Fair

EVEN over in the Capitalist State of Castleton there are rotten roads, noisy and thick with fumes, and it is beside such a road that Socialist Minority Councillor Megs, with his wife and baby. But in the few brief hours of night which remain to them between baby's crying, playing and sucking, they still lie sleepless, shaken awake by the thundering juggernauts which race day and night past their home. In fact, Councillor cannot see why Irish Meat Transporters en route for the Continent need pass through Castleton at all.

And so he invited our Transport Minister (who won't allow a night-time ban on lorries) to spend 24 hours in his shuddering home stand on his balcony and experience the hell in which residents live, but Minister won't answer.

Minister's not interested in the loose mortar, cracked walls, sleeplessness and breakdowns contained within the roadside dwellings. He wants an Enquiry. The trouble is that we've had five public enquiries about this already. Minister ignored 93 recommendations from all of them and wants another one.

Traffic lobbies have begged him not to, but it's like his lust for privatising. He must, must have Enquiry. He just loves the tension of it all, the frustration, the delay, the sight of the city crumbling and the residents all going barking mad as things twiddle along to ruin.

Also it's relaxing for him. He's not the most energetic of Ministers and this way he can just flop about, watching, waiting, not banning things. It can be a good life, the life of a Minister. There you are, all powerful, watching from on high, like the Archangel Ironist, knowing the inevitability of the future and the A of the struggle, seeing the joke.

Of course there are also sensible reasons for jumbo lorries to pelt through the metropolis day and night. There's no traffic at night. They can whizz along at 50 mph. It cracks up the roads and houses a bit more but it's quicker. It's also it's more interesting.

There are more and pleasanter tea-shops and lavatories for the weary drivers, more for them to look at. It's a dull and boring life, just driving along a soulless motorway.

Juggernauts could stop outside town and change loads to smaller lorries. Gargantuan Frozen Foods, a giant among haulage firms, said they'd build a trans-shipment depot for the change-over. They could organise it with no extra cost and so co-operate with a night-time ban.

So it can be done, but Minister and other transporters aren't as obliging. What puts them off is the belief that we are a flawed species in the main, and if everyone swapped over loads mid-journey, that would give the tea-leaves another go at it, double opportunity for things to fall from the backs of lorries, like the shiploads of Japanese televisions that do already.

Anyway, juggernauts can be fun. Down in the country there's going to be a Juggernaut Jammer this month. "Extrovert international star" drivers with "big personalities" to suit the jumbo-sized racers shall be thundering around courting Death.

Councillor and other roadside residents must be more positive, pretend they're at the circuit, soak up the thrill of it all and meanwhile, like many of his kind, Minister shall watch His own toy circuit from above — the little people below, deafened and trembling, the little councillor screaming on his balcony, the tiny crumbling homes and worn out roads. All His-own work. He doesn't need to visit.

Michele Hanson

Songs on the way to a British Sondheim

IS THERE life after Lloyd Webber? Or is the recent revival of the British musical a mere flash in the Tin Pan Alley?

These were two of many questions prompted by a Friday morning session at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama. The occasion was the final of the Vivian Ellis Prize, a national competition for young writers for the musical stage, initiated by the Performing Rights Society and the Guild of School Music.

What we heard on Friday were two songs, one from the five front-runners with the $500 prize going to composer George Stiles (23) and lyricist Anthony Drewe (24) for their version of Kipling's Just So Stories.

What we also heard was a good deal of jaw-jaw from the judges and the audience all keen to offer their reflections on the current and future state of the musical.

The first thing to say is that the Vivian Ellis Prize was itself a cheering event. People are still out there writing shows. One finalist, all of 13, had written a metaphysical musical about good and evil, ending a torch-song, "Last Night and Busy Nights, that (as Tim Rice pointed out) was the kind of number one associates with Ella or Billy Holiday. Another finalist, Charles Hart, proffered a pastiche version of Moll Flanders that showed a gift for multiple internal rhymes and playful counterpoint, a slightly reminiscent of Stephen Sondheim.

Inevitably, Sondheim's

Does Stephen Sondheim (right) point the way ahead for British musical writers? Michael Billington reports beautiful and relatively simply-staged Sunday in the Park With George, the show is a popular smash. Sondheim's music and lyrics are rich and complex: what they need are uncluttered productions.

But is he a dubious model? Emphatically not. What has been shown is that the modern musical can take on board substantial ideas (the Americanisation of the East, Victorian moral suasion, the changing role of the artist) and that a present-day composer can hardly pretend to be Stravinsky or Britten. As a student member on Friday suggested that we should march on the musical, I would claim that we often don't ask enough. If the musical is to survive, it has to be free to take on the whole of life and to do so in an idiotism that reflects the growing complexity of twentieth-century music.

I am not suggesting we send in troops of Sondheim clones; nor am I denying that people clearly go to musicals for spectacle, pizzazz and uplift. The crowds that thronged the Royal Opera House are evidence of that. But it is worth pointing out that the American block-buster musical has currently reached an exhaustion-point (there is to be no Tony Award for Best Musical this year because of a dearth of candidates) and there is no steady supply of lavish imports waiting in the wings to fill our big theatres. If we want new musicals, we are clearly going to have to make our own.

The only certain truth is that audiences clearly relish ideas that are bold, bizarre and highly theatrical. The popular British hits of recent years have concerned themselves with Jesus Christ, Eva Peron, dancing cats and skating trains: now we are promised one on an international chess-competition.

What we lack in Britain is any off-Broadway-style house where you can workshop a musical and flick it slowly into shape.

What we urgently need is a safe house where the future Lloyd Webbers can try out their work free from the murderous economies of the West End. Then — and only then — will be able to capitalise on the British musical's recent restoration to something approaching life and offer a home to the embryonic talents thrown up by the Vivian Ellis Prize.

Tom Sutcliffe on Placido Domingo's Andrea Chenier at Covent Garden

A fright at the Opera

SOMETIMES opera is just like show-jumping. Will Placido Domingo, world's greatest tenor, have a clear head? There are some chief fences in Giordano's Andrea Chenier, though they've never been a problem to the other world's greatest tenor Luciano Pavarotti, and famous old Italian stallions like Benigni, Gigli and Corelli used to sail over them.

On Saturday Domingo seemed to be rushing his fences. In fact, in show-jumping terms, he'd walked through two courses of bricks and bashed his hind leg against wedges of wood. But you don't actually expect a world's greatest tenor to refuse.

The big act one number, Un di all'azzurro spazio had just got to its revolutionary core. The tenor-poet should have been describing how he had overheard a poor man cursing his poverty. Instead he simply walked into the wings — leaving the orchestra holding the chord.

Time stood still. Everybody stared transfixed at the spot where Domingo had made his last voice and then the curtains closed and almost at once Sir John Tooley, director of the opera, sprang out in front of the curtains as if he'd been waiting in the wings. "Mr Domingo, as you will have realised is indisposed. Is there a doctor in the house? In fact I know there is. World Dr. Marshall please come down to the door at the front of the stalls."

After about 10 minutes with the house lights up Sir John brought more news. "Mr Domingo is unwell, but it is only some kind of indisposition. He has gone back to his dressing-room to do some vocal exercises, and we shall have the curtain up for the performance from the beginning of his aria in a few more minutes."

Finally the curtains parted to reveal the tenor cowering stage.

Of course the excitement was immense. A second refusal was unthinkable — it would have been like a nervous breakdown. The dramatic meaning of the aria was utterly ruined. Those B fats should be offensive, brutal and indecorous, assaults on ancient regime delicacy. But now everybody hung on them, willing Domingo to succeed.

And indeed he found the resource to register the notes with the required generosity, which had been evading him earlier in the show.

What really happened? It certainly looked and felt as though he had walked off in a fit of temper because he was dissatisfied with how his performance was going. Domingo is less than ideal for the role of Chenier because of the kind of tenor he is. It requires raw danger, and a touch of vulgarity and daring. Domingo has a wonderful technique, but he seldom takes risks or follows the drama into the imaginative tension below the surface of the music.

Apart from the pleasure of Domingo's voice, only one other singer in this revival is worth attention. Giorgio Zancanaro may not stretch to acting, but he has a truly marvellous baritone. He sings with a shimmering vibrato and a good outline. Anna Tomowa-Sintov's stolid but dull Maddalena is a severe come-down after Rosalind Plowright's fireworks.

Richard Armstrong's rhythmic drive when this production was first borrowed from Cologne was far preferable to the factitious conducting of Julius Rudel, who does seem one of the world's worst. Covent Garden, finding Rudel, put a cruel handicap on both the big tenor shows of the last eight weeks. (Vicki's Samson was almost destroyed). What will they think of next? Why hire star singers if you're not going to match them with quality conductors?

Edward Greenfield welcomes von Karajan back to London

Fourth on fire

IN THE four years since Herbert von Karajan last conducted the Berlin Philharmonic in London, the long-standing relationship between conductor and orchestra has had a serious hiccup. Recent records have suggested that no lasting harm has been done musically by the bitter and prolonged row, and here was a concert of Beethoven and Strauss to show even more conclusively that Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic as a combination remain peerless in the world of music.

Subtly the sound has changed, and indeed here the interpretations have been carefully recorded. I have chapters and verse on the way in which both Beethoven's Fourth Symphony (last played here by him in 1970) and Strauss's Ein Heldenleben (last played here in 1976) have relaxed a degree in their speeds.

The small margin in seconds does nothing to diminish the Karajan electricity but a lot to allow musical elbow room for the expert, including such masterly players as the oboist, Lothar Koch, and the clarinetist, Karl Leister.

In Beethoven's slow rhythms have extra spring to them, and what this performance of the Fourth Symphony established was that Karajan's new recording is the way that he now brings out the sparseness of much of the writing. Karajan always used to be accused of producing too saturated a sound from the orchestra, but now with string tone fresher than before but just as sweet and true, the result is leaner and more sharply communicative.

So the pianissimo leading back to the recapitulation in the first movement was a fragmentary phrase hushed over a softly menacing trumpet roll pointed forward to the menace of war passage at the end of the Missa Solemnis. The Fourth movement was far more the lighter, intermediate work it often seems. I only wish Karajan would now start to observe exposition repeats.

That Karajan has aged is certainly clear from his slightly even in climbing the podium, but interpretatively there is nothing but gain. Where once he would command make Strauss seem as great as Beethoven, it was now, with his far more intimate phrasing, lay, even though Heldenleben was played for all it is worth.

Refreshingly alert: Samantha Eggar and John Hurt in The Seagull. Picture by Douglas Jeffery

Michael Billington reviews The Seagull at the Lyric Hammersmith

Just a chuckle with Chekhov

I SET out for The Seagull at the Lyric Hammersmith thinking the British do too much Chekhov. London alone has seen this play three times in the last four years in productions by the Royal Court, Shared Experience and Greenfield. Do we need to re-visit Sorin's estate quite so soon? But after three hours spent watching Charles Sturridge's production (jointly presented by Oxford Playhouse) in the company of a packed Saturday-night house, I was persuaded that there is a special magic for Chekhov and that Mr Sturridge had re-thought the play.

Like every director in my experience, he says he wishes to bring out the comedy. The difference is that he has. When Phoebe Nicholls's Masha says she is mourning, she sings herself tearfully on a chair-lounger and then spreads her arms wide adding "for my life". It gets a laugh. When Alfred Burke's excellent artistic Sorin cackles over his own wasted life, we share his despairing amusement. And when Natasha Richardson's bright-eyed, lyrical Nina, in her moment of battle the nestles against his crotch and squeezes his thigh as if assured of easy conquest; and her subsequent "Stay if you want to" for once misses its usual laugh.

In stripping the play of bogus English wistfulness, Mr Sturridge sometimes forgets real Russian soul-ache. But (as we know from Bridget Jones) he is good with actors and three of the main performances are spot-on. John Hurt's Trigorin is the best thing I have seen him do in the theatre: outwardly elegant, inwardly full of self-disgust and appalled by his own moral weakness, even clenching his fist when vamped by Arkadina. John Polina, shackled to the coarse estate-manager, is the acting passion for Doctor Dom. And where in Samantha Eggar's beautiful Arkadina, snuffing her show to prove she is "light as a bird", is the strenuous fear of losing Trigorin? In her moment of battle she nestles against his crotch and squeezes his thigh as if assured of easy conquest; and her subsequent "Stay if you want to" for once misses its usual laugh.

In stripping the play of bogus English wistfulness, Mr Sturridge sometimes forgets real Russian soul-ache. But (as we know from Bridget Jones) he is good with actors and three of the main performances are spot-on. John Hurt's Trigorin is the best thing I have seen him do in the theatre: outwardly elegant, inwardly full of self-disgust and appalled by his own moral weakness, even clenching his fist when vamped by Arkadina. John Lynch's Konstantin, with urgent, accusing profile, genuinely looks like a man with nails being driven into his brain.

Phoebe Nicholls's Masha, hungrily devouring every word Konstantin says and throwing up after his death, also manages to be comic and tragic at the same time. But about Natasha Richardson's Nina I am divided. She is brilliant at the intertemporal youthful ardour and awe in the presence of time. What she misses is the sense of ruin in the fourth-act return: she is like a seagull who has been mildly winged rather than fatally shot (my own feeling is that the writing here declines into sentimental melodrama). But even given what were incontrovertibly the scrag-end plays, the Wars of the Roses and Titus. Often, in the course of the series, it was the less regarded, the neglected plays which offered the best chances of surprise and delight and those big, booming Wars of the Roses were a notable hit for Jane Howell.

Robin Thormber on the new Wesker

Menopausal man

ARNOLD Wesker's new play is a very dull, slight, and shoddy piece which is unlikely to even cast a warm glow around Leicester.

He describes the play as an "entertainment", presumably to let it off the hook of having to be ponderous, or what he would call serious. He includes a nude and some conjuring tricks, and people use the word "fuck" quite naturally and quite often. So I suppose he would regard it as positively frivolous and daring at the same time. It drops names like Spinoza and Nietzsche in a way that is almost unrecognised.

Written in 1978, One More Ride On The Merry-Go-Round is about a professor of moral philosophy who has reached the age of 50 and decided to drop out, travel, and screw around.

He is giving up his job; he says, because the world needs less works to keep on turning.

He has also given up his wife and taken a younger mistress. His wife, a civil servant who, in her spare time, is trying to persuade Europe to give up week's wages to feed the Third World, has taken a younger lover. "The world is going through its menopause," he says in what seems to be a rather subjective projection.

The play is boring because none of its protagonists faces a real choice. Instead we are presented with a torrent of verbosity. Wesker mistakes repetition for passion: his litany of escapist Shaggy La's sounds sadly like a list, a dutiful itinerary. And not one of the performances in Graham Watkin's production at the Leicester Phoenix conveyed to me a sense of exciting possibilities.

Cardiff David Adams

Write On

THE MOST exciting theatrical event of the year in Cardiff has been not some major production but a fortnight of happenings organised by the imaginative Made In Wales Stage Company.

There have been plays on offer during this festival of new writing, and some very interesting and enjoyable ones, too, but the quite thrilling part of it all has been the transformation of the stage into a workshop of the Sherman Theatre into a lively, creative, energetic centre where theatre has been discussed, worked at, shown, talked about and enjoyed not just in the Armis studio space but over food, over coffees and over pints. Never has there been such a buzz here, and it bodes well for the future of the newly established Sherman Theatre Company that will be working with Made In Wales.

The writers' workshops

Salisbury Paul Lewis

Emma

IT IS universally acknowledged that a theatre in search of a box office winner should stage an adaptation of a classic novel.

In terms of good stimulating theatre, to misquote Mrs Elton on Emma "one has no great hopes from adaptations. I always say there is something direful in the sound."

In fact, David Horlock, who also directs, has done a creditable job. The claustrophobia of Austen's microcosmic society comes across well as characters overlap their exits and entrances with the effect that they are always literally looking over each other's shoulders.

Literary style is not so easy to simulate in theatre. The Austen irony is replaced by an alienation effect whereby the heroine addresses the audience with third-person commentary from the novel and a large empty stage isolates the characters like insects under a magnifying glass. It does its job but it's used to produce a chain-store copy of a Savile Row suit rather than a piece of theatre in its own right.

It's better when the production doesn't try to imitate Austen's genius. For instance, Horlock and his case could do better to make her minute observation of characters so instead they turn in some enjoyable comic acting. In particular, Helen Gemmell as Emma bubbles with delight and burns with frustration.

The play faithfully includes a large amount of plot but, without Austen's incomparable descriptions, it's like Emma's father's "egg boiled very soft."

Fortunately, Jane Austen's own sense of drama provides some muscle. Her sparkling dialogue, often presented verbatim, sounds as good as it reads and the crescendo of dramatic tension preceding Emma's insult to Miss Bates is almost as electrifying on stage as on the page.

Stephanie Nettell reviews the new children's paperbacks

A boy from Bethlehem

Me and Jesus, by Eleanor Spence (1985, Lion, £1.50), is an unexpected character. A deceptively simple story with mystical undertones which could easily have fallen into murkyhavens. Spence is an Australian writer who has often been intrigued by the effect of a "different" child on those around him, but this time, rather ambiguously, the child is Jesus.

He is never overtly identified as such, but suddenly amid whispered rumours of special scraps with his parents into the life of the narrator, his cousin and later much-loved friend, who as an adult looks back at his family's history through their shared memories and inherited folklore.

It is a gently paced novel of childhood, told with affection and natural humour, whose satisfactions lie as much in the portrayal of everyday life in a Middle Eastern country long ago as in the tensions of discovering Jesus's secret. I would, I think, be a stimulating fictional partner to such humanistic-based course books as Richard Hughes's Nazareth and Jerusalem (1984) and Book 1 and 3 of A Primary Religious Education Course, Oxford, £2.75 each), which imaginatively evoke the life and customs of ancient Palestine through a prompting question-and-answer method and colourful illustrations (9-12).

Even more details of the boy's days spring early to life in Jesus the Nazarene, Book 5 of Norman Bull's comprehensive The Bible Story And Its Background, long established but new with Books 7, 8 and 9, completely revised to take account of changing approaches to religious studies and to show "a greater sensitivity towards members of other faiths." Straight narrative information, interspersed with a wealth of illustrations and details, is available in a fairly conventional class study. Suggested. Most suited to the 10-12s, there is fascination here for anyone (1985/84, Eikon, £3.10 each).

Kids' London, by Elizabeth Holt and Wendy Packer (1985, Picon, £2.50), has been making itself useful since 1972, but this new edition is better than ever. An astonishing range of activities and interests are listed alphabetically, from the unlikely (camp sites; orienteering) to the obvious and cross-referenced: with addresses and travel information. Sensible advice, too, about getting lost, whom to approach, and how to survive extra. Great value for visitor and Londoner alike — we found it more helpful than the Yellow Pages for

TOP COMEDIAN • SINGERS
BANDS • DISCO • BUFFET
RAIS-FRIBATS-SATURDAYS
11PM - LICENSED TILL 2AM
The Friday 30th/Saturday 1st May CHRIS BARRIE of Saturday Night Takeaway Show
+ CARLA MENDONÇA
Friday 31st/Saturday 1st May
BLOOLIPS
Friday 31st/Saturday 1st May
JOHN COOPER CLARKE
+ JOHNNY MCDONALD & THE AXLES
Cabaret
PICCADILLY
100, Piccadilly Theatre, Denham Street
Tel: 01-477 4005/4006/4007/4008/4009/4010

A boy from Bethlehem
Me and Jesus, by Eleanor Spence (1985, Lion, £1.50), is an unexpected character. A deceptively simple story with mystical undertones which could easily have fallen into murkyhavens. Spence is an Australian writer who has often been intrigued by the effect of a "different" child on those around him, but this time, rather ambiguously, the child is Jesus.

He is never overtly identified as such, but suddenly amid whispered rumours of special scraps with his parents into the life of the narrator, his cousin and later much-loved friend, who as an adult looks back at his family's history through their shared memories and inherited folklore.

It is a gently paced novel of childhood, told with affection and natural humour, whose satisfactions lie as

Stephanie Nettell reviews the new children's paperbacks

A boy from Bethlehem
Me and Jesus, by Eleanor Spence (1985, Lion, £1.50), is an unexpected character. A deceptively simple story with mystical undertones which could easily have fallen into murkyhavens. Spence is an Australian writer who has often been intrigued by the effect of a "different" child on those around him, but this time, rather ambiguously, the child is Jesus.

He is never overtly identified as such, but suddenly amid whispered rumours of special scraps with his parents into the life of the narrator, his cousin and later much-loved friend, who as an adult looks back at his family's history through their shared memories and inherited folklore.

It is a gently paced novel of childhood, told with affection and natural humour, whose satisfactions lie as

"Comic acting at its finest" S.T.A.

ANTON RODGERS
MICHAEL WILLIAMS
TWO INTO ONE
MURRAY WATSON
WANDA VENTHAM
KATHY STAFF
Written and Directed by RAY COONEY

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE Box Office 379 5999
Credit Cards 741 9999

After Telecom stand by for Thatcher's second lesson on people's capitalism

ECONOMICS NOTEBOOK

Victor Keegan

PRIVATISATION is back in high fashion. Abroad the seven leading industrialised nations will this week "privatise" the problem of what they should do to generate economic growth as economic activity slows down. What they will do is nothing. They will leave it to the markets, a solution which, if it had been applied to the US economy in the first place, would not have produced a recovery anything like as strong as what happened.

At home privatisation has reappeared in the form of the denationalisation of British Gas. This is to be the Great British Public's second instalment of Mrs Thatcher's course in people's capitalism following the giveaway — sorry stunning success — of the privatisation of British Telecom.

Now there is a very strong argument that one of the things Britain needs is more capitalistic risk takers, whether in the private or public sectors. But it can also be argued that the very worst way to go about this is to sell off monopoly profits machines like British Telecom or British Gas to provide a once and for all double-your-money overnight profit for the man in the street.

What the country desperately needs is more people willing to put down long-term risk capital in the hitherto areas of the future which may produce high profits (but equally high losses) in the years to come.

Give me a dozen Clive Simmonds prepared to back their last shirt on their own ideas (only 20 per cent of which may be profitable) for every state monopoly denationalised. By inducing investors to buy shares in monopolies at bargain basement prices the government has created a quite false impression of what risk capitalism is all about. To make matters worse they have not even allocated a penny piece of the proceeds of the monopoly sales towards investing in the hitherto growth areas of the future where private capital is reluctant to tread.

The privatisation of British Telecom was pretty enough, but that of British Gas is in a class of its own.

If, for instance, there is another energy crisis which doubles or even quadruples the cost of oil, then the price of gas (always oil-related) will shoot up without necessarily any change in its cost, since gas is piped in from the North Sea. In such circumstances British Gas could either keep its prices stable, thereby generating an artificial (presumably) rise in profits, or it could pass on the cost of oil to its customers. Or it will receive a huge windfall, rise in profits which will accrue to shareholders (as opposed to taxpayers) for completely fortuitous reasons.

British Gas is already, thanks to past oil price increases, so hugely profitable that it has not only extinguished its debts, but actually lends money to the Treasury, reversing the traditional banker-client role. This helps the borrowing requirement at present. Privatisation of British Gas (unlike those more typical public enterprises which have large borrowings) will thus worsen Treasury finances in the long run, once the temporary — favourable — impact of capital receipts from privatisation is exhausted.

The government would double the argument, while conceding that British Gas will still be a monopoly and so unable to benefit from more "competition" that it will nevertheless be able to pursue a more entrepreneurial course, once freed from government interference.

This will receive an unqualified welcome from the board of BG which has been subjected to enormous interference ranging from pressure to put up its prices by more than it wanted to in order to boost government income to constant threats to force BG to sell off its network of showrooms, which the corporation regards as essential to its operations.

But the biggest irony is that BG is the living proof that you did not need to be privatised to be entrepreneurially successful. BG has been highly successful, in partnership with the private sector in discovering oil and gas in the North Sea and onshore for the benefit of the taxpayer. The government forced the corporation to sell off its oil activities (now a private sector company called Enterprise Oil).

Moreover, the government also forced BG to sell off its onshore oil discovery in Dorset which would never have happened on the scale it did, but for the fact that BG insisted on going ahead with further drilling against the advice of its private sector partner, BP.

Will a newly privatised BG now be allowed to resume oil exploration activities? It would be bizarre to privatise the company and then deny it the freedom to develop inherent in other private companies. But it would be equally bizarre to reinstate something which the government took away from BG on the grounds that it had no business to be involved in oil discoveries no matter how profitable they might be.

I suppose all this does tend to lead to the perverse notion that if governments deliberately interfere with the operations of public enterprises so that they are forced to be less efficient than otherwise then the absence of government might improve efficiency.

But, of course, you don't need to privatise in order to get the government off your back. BP, after all, was operated very efficiently for many years with the government as majority shareholder. Nor does it follow that privatisation will keep the government at arms length.

Nor does it guarantee that a future government will not re-nationalise with all the in-built advantages (as the chairman of ICI pointed out last week) that that brings. There is, of course, a middle way — the encouragement of genuinely mixed economy companies owned partly by government, partly by private investors and partly by their own employees.

Such companies would have a good chance of surviving elections and benefiting from so-called market pressures and the strategic thinking of government.

When Japan privatises its telephone system it is done as part of a national strategy in which the government is intimately involved. In Britain, done to raise short-term cash, future governments will have to live with the consequences.

Chambers of Commerce attack 'simplistic' policies

New demand for boost to industry

By Michael Smith, Industrial Editor

Renewed pressure is being applied to the government from within the business community to take urgent steps to stimulate industry and create new jobs.

The latest plea comes from the Association of British Chambers of Commerce and reflects the growing unease within the business community over government economic and industrial policies.

The association, reflecting nationwide business responses, has issued a grim warning of further decline in manufacturing industry and continuing job losses at a time of growing concern over government policies. It follows last week's stern remarks from two of Britain's most distinguished businessmen, the GEC chief, Lord Weinstock, and the ICI chairman, John Harvey-Jones, who publicly ridiculed government policies.

Lord Weinstock and Mr Harvey-Jones, two of the country's most senior and respected industrialists, dismissed as "absolute rubbish" the government belief that growth and development of service industries like tourism would compensate for the loss of production and jobs through the decline of manufacturing industry.

Their strong argument is given full support from the Chambers of Commerce who see no end to the decline, and no way to compensate for the loss of production and jobs through the decline of manufacturing industry.

The association, reflecting nationwide business responses, has issued a grim warning of further decline in manufacturing industry and continuing job losses at a time of growing concern over government policies. It follows last week's stern remarks from two of Britain's most distinguished businessmen, the GEC chief, Lord Weinstock, and the ICI chairman, John Harvey-Jones, who publicly ridiculed government policies.

There was "considerable evidence" to show what ministers were allowing the problem to drift and that the government had "very little idea of where job and wealth-creating production might arise."

The association also publishes an extract from a letter by the Chancellor, Mr Nigel Lawson, to support its claim that ministers were unconcerned. In the letter to the association on December 3, 1984, Mr Lawson wrote: "I cannot agree that there is any special cause for concern in a deficit in trade in manufactures."

For the first time since the Industrial Revolution, Britain is now showing a deficit on trade with the rest of the world in manufactured goods and products.

The association is as dismissive as Lord Weinstock and Mr Harvey-Jones of the government case that growth in service industries will meet the shortfall in manufacturing

The majority of service industries were locally based and not exportable; a one per cent decline in manufacturing exports demanded a 3 per cent increase in service exports to compensate; and the growth of service exports was inextricably linked to the expansion of manufacturing exports.

"About one fifth of all service industry output has manufacturing industry as its customer and it is basically the wealth generated directly or indirectly by manufacturing industry that puts money in the pockets of the rest of the service industry's customers."

In dismissing the government's policies as "simplistic" the association says a series of urgent steps need to be taken. These include avoiding any sharp fluctuations in interest rates; a reduction in industry's costs; the promotion of pay restraint; and the encouragement of renewed investment in research and development facilities.

Gloomy IMF view of British economy

From Alex Brummer in Washington

THE International Monetary Fund expects Britain's economic performance over the next two years to lag behind that of other industrial countries, according to a series of detailed forecasts released yesterday.

The IMF's World Economic Outlook says that growth in the British economy this year will not be enough to offset a further rise in the public sector deficit which it expects to rise from 12.7 per cent in 1984 to 13 per cent this year. But a marginal improvement in Britain's employment picture is expected in 1985.

The report paints a rather more gloomy picture of Britain's prospects than the Chancellor, Mr Nigel Lawson, Growth in the UK economy would be about 2.4 per cent this year and next — close to the level of 1984 — while the services sector, affected by the miners' strike, would be more or less in line with other big industrial countries this year, it would begin to fall below West Germany next year and would continue to lag the US and Japan.

The report, issued ahead of this week's seven-nation economic summit in Bonn, argues that the stickiness of growth and unemployment in Britain and other major European countries is the result of a series of structural rigidities in both the capital and labour markets.

There had been a marked ageing of capital stock in many industrial countries including Canada, the UK, France and West Germany as a result of a "significantly weakened" financial position in industry, some of the blame for this "must lie with excessive subsidisation and protection of declining industries" which had been shielded from market pressures.

Indexed wages, introduced at the time of the price rises of the late 1970s, are blamed for the slow improvement in unemployment.

Among the policy options explored are the elimination of regulations which affect productivity and efficiency, and emphasis on "structural reforms" for nationalised industries, and a reduction in the "social costs" of employment.

The report recommends a series of tax-based incentives, including a general reduction in the tax rates on profits and specific deductions aimed at rewarding capital investment or employment of displaced workers.

Consortium bid likely soon for Westland

By David Simpson, Business Correspondent

A takeover bid for Britain's struggling helicopter manufacturer, Westland, from a consortium headed by Alan Bristow, founder of Bristol Helicopters, and Alan Curtis, one of the men behind the Lotus Cars resurgence, will materialise within the next few days.

Mr Bristow and Mr Curtis are understood to have won financial support from a number of institutions for their bid, and now have the funds guaranteed to allow them to make their offer.

This is not likely to be at a level much in excess of Westland's current market price of 140p a share, which puts a total value of $83 million on the group.

If the consortium bid succeeds, Mr Bristow, whose Bristol Helicopters is now a subsidiary of the Ministry of Defence, would take over the management control of Westland. There are indications that institutions which are already shareholders in Westland will be prepared to accept the consortium offer rather than risk the possibility of the helicopter group running deeper and deeper into debt.

Mr Bristow is understood to be in favour of retaining most of Westland's existing businesses, including its British Hovercraft Corporation subsidiary. But if the bid does succeed, there would certainly be sweeping changes among the group's top management and the danger of substantial redundancies within the 11,000 strong workforce, although the consortium is unlikely to institute any immediate programme of job losses on a large scale.

It now seems probable that Westland is not to gain an essential $60 million order for its W30 helicopter for India and indeed, the future of the W30, the planned replacement for the Puma and Wessex troop-carriers, appears in serious jeopardy.

The Ministry of Defence has already spurred an appeal from Westland for extra interim research funds for the W30, and has now also suggested that it will not itself be interested in buying the helicopter, which was ordered to be in production in 1987.

Westland's mounting cash flow problems has led to a series of cuts in the Ministry of Defence over the group's ability to continue to fund the development of the EH101, the joint venture helicopter with the Italian firm, Augusta, designed as the replacement for the Sea King.

The ministry is known to believe it essential that the UK retain an independent helicopter manufacturing capacity, although it is not prepared to directly fund Westland, and for that reason, is expected to give its tacit support to the consortium bid.

Maxwell all set for cable TV switch on

By Maggie Brown

Mr Robert Maxwell's cable television company, British Cable Services, is about to start installing its advanced System 8 service in Guildford, Surrey, where it holds the franchise.

Mr Ian Harkness, the marketing director, confirmed that installation was being sought to install the system to 2,000 homes, one tenth of the franchise area. The aim is to work during the summer and have services ready by next September.

It has already placed orders for a range of cable hardware for installation in homes with the Cambridge Electronic Industries subsidiary, Labgear Cablevision.

Applications close tomorrow for the next five cable franchise areas, and the Cable Television Association estimates that there is little competition, with one bidder coming forward per franchise.

These are thought to be Cotswold Cable, for Gloucester and Cheltenham; Reed Cable & Vision for Bolton; Shaw Cable for Wandsworth; East London Communications for the London Docklands; and Maxwell's BCS for West Surrey, the Lush Farnham, Farnborough, Woking and Godalming areas next to Guildford.

Mr Maxwell has been rumoured as a surprise bidder for the London Docklands franchise.

Co-op approaches £1bn mark

By Clive Woodcock

In spite of difficult trading conditions in the past year, Britain's largest Co-op retailer, Co-operative Retail Services, raised its pre-tax profits by 11.6 per cent on sales which rose 11.3 per cent to take the society close to the £1 billion mark.

Turnover in 1984 rose by $28 million to a record $261 million which, after making adjustments for new and closed shops amounted to an increase double the rise in the relevant price index. The society earned profits of $14.7 million, an increase of $1.5 million on the previous year.

Announcing the results today, the chief executive, Mr Bill Farrow, said that with the society's financial restructuring, management reorganisation and stores redevelopment programme, all well under way, progress should be maintained and accelerated.

CRS, which has more than 800 supermarkets and shops in England and Wales, could now "start to flex its muscles again for the future," Mr Farrow added.

The society is currently undergoing a major reorganisation of its management structure, involving the progressive integration of its 12 existing regions to form six trading sectors, with trading operations controlled from the national office in Manchester.

Borrowings have fallen, with loan capital repayments during the year of more than $24 million, while investments in, and earnings from, property have increased marginally. In spite of the loan repayments the society has been able to transfer $15.6 million to reserves compared with $6 million last year.

"The society's financial strength is perhaps best demonstrated by noting that reserves now equate to almost 80 per cent of share capital as against only 47 per cent two years ago."

Trading conditions were affected by the mining dispute, which adversely affected sales in two major CRS regions, Yorkshire and South West Wales.

BCCI HOLDINGS (LUXEMBOURG) SA

39 Boulevard Royal, Luxembourg

Financial Highlights 1984

Capital Fund	US $ 1,008 million
Deposits	US $ 10,512 million
Loans and Advances	US $ 5,153 million
Total Assets	US $ 14,348 million
Profit before Tax	US $ 277 million
Capital/Assets Ratio	exceeds 7%
Branches and Offices in	70 Countries

Principal Subsidiaries

Bank of Credit & Commerce International S.A., Luxembourg.
Bank of Credit & Commerce International (Overseas) Ltd., Grand Cayman.

Subsidiaries, Affiliates and their branches/offices in the following countries

Australia	France	Jordan	Netherlands Antilles	Sudan
Bahamas	Gabon	Niger	Swaziland
Bahrain	Germany (West)	Korea (South)	Switzerland
Bangladesh	Ghana	Kuwait	Thailand
Barbados	Gibraltar	Lebanon	Togo
Botswana	Grand Cayman	Liberia	Turkey
Brazil	Hong Kong	Luxembourg	UAE
Cameroon	India	Macau	United Kingdom
Canada	Indonesia	Malaysia	Uruguay
China	Ile of Man	Maldives	USA
Colombia	Italy	Mauritius	Venezuela
Cyprus	Ivory Coast	Monaco	Yemen (North)
Djibouti	Jamaica	Morocco	Zambia
Egypt	Japan	Netherlands	Zimbabwe

Labour unveils jobs plan for West Midlands

By David Simpson

The Labour Party's jobs and industry campaign, designed to persuade the electorate that the Opposition has a viable policy for reducing unemployment, will be taken a step further today by Neil Kinnock when he unveils a regional plan for the West Midlands.

The plan will be the first in a series of policy documents concentrating on Labour proposals for regenerating jobs and industry in those areas which have been worst hit by depression and unemployment. In today's document, the Labour Party points out that, of Britain's manufacturing base, an unemployment rate three per cent above the national average with 300,000 workers in the West Midlands having lost their jobs since the Conservatives came to power.

Not only did almost 1,300 West Midlands businesses go bankrupt in 1984 alone, but the government was refusing to intervene to stop jobs being lost in the 25 large groups which together provide almost half the total employment in the area.

Among these is British Leyland, the largest element in the local motor industry, which accounts for over seven per cent of all manufacturing jobs in the West Midlands.

The Labour plan attacks the government proposals to cut off funds from BL and later to privatise the group, claiming that instead it must be left within the public sector and supplied with adequate funding to allow it to make sufficient technological advances to keep abreast of foreign competitors.

Hitting strongly that a future Labour government will introduce selective import controls, the West Midlands regional plan argues that BL needs a 30 per cent market share of UK car sales if it is to survive, and that this means that imports must be pruned back from the present 56 per cent level in their 1979 market share of 45 per cent.

Boom for free papers

By our Financial Staff

At least ten big British cities could have their own free daily newspaper within the next five years, the editor of Britain's first free daily said yesterday.

Mr David Scott, the editor of Birmingham's Daily News, the first free daily newspaper, said that the paper launched last October, told the spring conference of the Guild of British Newspaper Editors in Guernsey that he expected other similar operations to spring up.

The effect on regional paid-for papers could be "catastrophic" unless the regional press lowered its cost base substantially. The Birmingham Daily News was hoping to break even by the end of this year and Mr Scott hinted that those behind the venture were already considering the launch of further titles.

The new national paper planned by the free newspaper publisher, Mr Eddie Shah, would itself eventually be free, Mr Shah told the conference.

Tin prices brought under control

COMMODITIES

Robin Stainer

The International Tin Council, which regulates supplies of the metal, is confident that it has the market under its control and can prevent a dramatic fall in prices. Doubts about this had been prompted by a drop in the price last week below the floor set under the tin pack to a seven-year low.

Such a fall has always been on the cards since the 22-nation ITC decided last month that the floor price — Malaysian $29.15 a kilo on the Kuala Lumpur market — should no longer be sacrosanct. Currency market developments in the preceding months, in particular sterling's decline against the Malaysian dollar, were behind this unprecedented move.

The equivalent of the floor on the London Metal exchange — the other big trading centre for tin — had risen as sterling fell, but the ITC lacked sufficient resources to bring the market price up to this ever rising minimum. Even when LME tin reached its record of $10,285 a tonne in February it was still below the floor.

For more than a year, the Kuala Lumpur price, which had been at the floor for nearly all of the period, maintained a substantial premium over London. Trade and investment inevitably bought where it was cheaper, leaving the ITC, which controls the market through intervention buying by its buffer stock and export quotas imposed on its six producer member governments, as frequently the only purchaser in the East.

But while making these necessary purchases to stop the floor from being breached, the ITC was selling in London, to provide a regular inflow of cash. Between the two cash markets was eventually seen as essential to avoid these loss-making operations. It was briefly achieved earlier this month, thanks largely to the pound's sharp recovery. In fact, for a time, London moved to a premium and the Kuala Lumpur price came off the floor.

Sterling's renewed decline last week, however, once again changed the picture and the price in the East moved back to a premium, which it has maintained despite falling to a seven-year low.

Since the ITC had decided to abandon the rigid defence of the floor prices for tin, a drop below $29.15 had always been a possibility. Nonetheless, last week's decline did come as a surprise, triggering some nervous selling in London, which brought the market down to an eight-month low of just under $28.50.

Analysts and officials from ITC producing countries maintain that a realistic assessment of the market appears to offer little scope for a runaway fall in prices. Last week's developments are seen as little more than representing a tactical withdrawal and the ITC's flexibility over defence of the floor price as a sign of strength, not weakness.

The ITC is still prepared to provide support in both markets for tin, and its bankers have too much at stake to cut off funds now. If they did, prices would almost certainly collapse and their collateral, in the shape of the ITC's stocks, would be massively devalued.

Financed by direct contributions from member governments and loans, the ITC bought up this vast bulk of the world's surplus tin in its defence of a minimum price, thereby ensuring a return on sales probably double what it would otherwise be. As a result, producers were about $500 million better off last year.

This control of the world's stocks at a time when exports are being limited to 90 per cent of normal by quotas puts the ITC in a very strong position. Anyone who gambled on the contrary could get their fingers burned, according to market experts. The ITC is in no danger of going under, they say, especially now that commercial demand for the metal, which dropped to a 20-year low in 1983 during the recession, is rising.

With demand now running above supply, the ITC has been able to sell stockpiled metal to meet the deficit, which it forecasts at 13,500 tonnes for the first half of this year.

Other problems that have made the ITC job difficult in recent years are also easing. Far Eastern producers have reduced the volume of metal being smuggled out to avoid too, that the US will, abide by its gentlemen's agreement reached with Malaysia, Thailand and Indonesia to restrict sales to the market of stockpiled metal and that Brazil, which is not an ITC member, will temper the level of its exports.

It has been reported that Brazil, which has emerged as a significant producer within the only an 8 per cent rise in exports this year, after 50 per cent increase in 1984,

John G. 1.520

Moving a bit too fast for City critics

Michael Ashcroft turned Hawley group into a brokers' favourite. Andrew Cornelius meets him

BUSINESS PEOPLE

AT 39 years of age Michael Ashcroft is one of the better known company chairmen in the City. Not everyone is a fan, but it is still a surprising feat given that six years ago he could count on the fingers of one hand the number of people he knew in the Square Mile. Today, Hawley Group, the bombed-out, camping equipment company which he rescued from threatened receivership in 1978, is firmly established as one of the top 200 companies in the United Kingdom and never seems far from the sharp end of the City action.

The £400 million-a-year Hawley empire embraces Alpine double-glazing, Dolphin Showers, Koken Kitchens and an unlikely portfolio of investments in companies like Miss World, Henlys, and Pineapple Dance Studios. Mr Ashcroft won few friends last year by moving control of the group from London to Bermuda. He has also suffered because some of the more conservative influences in the City believe that he has moved too fast too soon. The most cynical observers claim that he has modelled himself on Jim Slater, the classic success story will end in tears.

Mr Ashcroft is losing patience with UK cynics who, he argues, are too ready to knock success. He does not accept that Hawley has an image problem. "We don't have a problem with those people who know me, or understand the business," he says. The snide comments tended to come from people who either did not have the time, ability, or inclination to find how the Hawley group worked.

This week Mr Ashcroft and his fellow directors are going on the road to give shareholders the opportunity to find out more about the group. When Hawley announced that it was moving domicile to Bermuda, Mr Ashcroft pledged to keep faith with UK investors by arranging the meetings. Today, the Hawley roadshow (complete with 45-minute video on how the group works) opens in Edinburgh tomorrow. It is Manchester and on Wednesday, London.

Hawley will also continue to produce an annual report which meets UK company reporting requirements and later this year is committed to reaching a stock market listing in New York where the reporting requirements are tougher than in Britain.

Mr Ashcroft's meteoric rise would delight Mrs Thatcher. Earning £100,000 a year, has a £10 million plus paper fortune, and properties in the UK and US, he travels by Concorde to business meetings in the US, and to UK meetings in a helicopter loaned by his business associate, David Wickens, the flamboyant head of the British Airports group and a friend of the Thatchers.

And it all started from "nowt". Armed with a grammar school education and an END in business studies, the young Ashcroft had no idea what he wanted to do. He joined the Rothmans cigarette group as a management trainee in 1967 and spent what he describes as "the two most boring years of my life" there. Then he moved to Pritchards, the cleaning business, and spent three years more fruitfully working in a department which was created to identify new acquisitions.

By this time Mr Ashcroft knew that he would have to strike out alone if he was to achieve anything in life, so he quit Pritchards, borrowed a copy of Yellow Pages, and began telephoning companies offering his services as a consultant. He reckons he contacted 2,000 companies in this way and he was rewarded with some money-spinning consultancy contracts.

His big break came when he negotiated the takeover of a tiny cleaning company, with a handful of employees. He used his knowledge of the business gained at Pritchards to win new contracts and identify acquisitions. At the same time he improved the company cash flow by squeezing cash from debtors and stringing out payments to creditors. Within four years the business employed 4,000 people and had a turnover of £4 million a year.

Michael Ashcroft: 'Business should be fun'

In 1977 Mr Ashcroft sold out for £1.3 million to Rackitt & Colman, but had to promise that he would not move back into industrial services for at least two years. Back at home again he began the search for a publicly quoted shell company which he could use as the vehicle to build the bigger business empire he craved. The search ended when he identified Hawley, a tiny camping equipment company with 12 stores in the Midlands, which was close to receivership. Some debt negotiations with the Hawley bankers and the family owners gave him 25 per cent of a company which had lost money in seven of the previous nine years.

In year one Hawley achieved pre-tax profits of £22,000. Last year Hawley made pre-tax profits of £31.4 million, and brokers are now predicting pre-tax profits of £40 million plus from the fast growing group in 1985.

He admits to studying the tactics adopted by Jim Slater, Tiny Rowland, Lord Hanson, Sir Owen Green. "You can learn from everyone," he says. But people conveniently forget that he was also an avid student of management. First and foremost he and the other so-called City wheeler-dealers were managers, and good ones at that.

The Ashcroft management style is informal. If the Hawley board is together in New York then they meet. Otherwise they are in almost constant contact by telephone. He also believes that business should be fun. People don't always want to be serious to get the adrenalin flowing. They want to be able to laugh and joke and see the funny side of things."

Ashcroft claims that he is not motivated by money. "Money is merely one measure of success. I would work just as hard if that measure was tiddlywinks." But what about the huge salary and lucrative stock options?

"I am not a philanthropist, and I am merely paid the market rate for my job," he says. Again, he reminds his critics that he did not draw a salary from Hawley before 1981 and lived from his own personal wealth. He maintains that business is a great challenge. The ultimate challenge is the US. Mr Ashcroft already spends several months there each year and in 1983 chalked up a record 21 return trips across the Atlantic. He is attracted by the American enthusiasm for business and success, which just does not exist in the UK.

"What is the ultimate goal? That's a difficult question. But we are an ambitious crowd."

Secretly though, Mr Ashcroft seems to want to be accepted by the City establishment, if only to prove the cynics wrong. But he is prepared to wait for that triumph. In the meantime he has the comfort of knowing that the leading brokers and institutions are hungry to buy Hawley shares. He concluded the interview by handing over the latest brokers' circulars on Hawley earmarking the shares as "a buy."

Solicitors in need of a legal eagle

CONSUMER COLUMN

A MARKET research survey carried out recently for the National Consumer Council showed an overwhelming preference among the public for independent investigation of complaints against solicitors.

People's evidence suggested a deep well of discontent with the present system under which complaints can be made to the Law Society, or ultimately passed through the courts.

"Many people feel inhibited by their lack of legal knowledge, the risk of further financial loss, their ignorance of the system as a whole," the NCC comments. "Even when they did find out about the complaints mechanism, people were more likely to be put off by its complexity or made suspicious by its apparent unfairness."

The NCC points out that many complaints are almost certainly unjustified. Many complainants are aggrieved at the "substance and procedure of the law itself" and others have made mistakes for themselves. A great many of the apparent problems between solicitors and their clients arise because of the solicitors' failure to explain matters clearly.

Clients whose attempts to pursue complaints through the Law Society have failed "have often the greatest difficulty in understanding and accepting the distinction between misconduct and negligence," the Council found.

Being referred to a solicitor or the Law Society's negligence panel does not provide redress for a client. Claims for damages or other redress have to be pursued through the courts. Yet many people are reluctant to court a second solicitor for fear of further losses, delays, or just because they cannot afford to do so.

The general level of dissatisfaction among solicitors' clients is hard to gauge exactly. The NCC takes it that around 15 per cent of the adult population consults a solicitor each year. Earlier surveys have found that while two clients out of every three receive one in eight is dissatisfied and one in 16 "expresses strong dissatisfaction."

On this basis, there could be a third of a million people in England and Wales who every year "express strong dissatisfaction" with the way their solicitor has handled their affairs.

The Bessie Commission on Legal Services found, when it studied the matter in detail, that in 1977 by far the greatest number of complaints were about solicitors taking insufficient interest, failing to do enough on a client's behalf, or taking too long to do it. Much less common were allegations of actual mistakes or even over-charging, and accusations of malpractice accounted for only 1 per cent of all complaints.

Citizens' Advice Bureau have also looked closely from time to time at the complaints they receive about solicitors.

Here, lack of communication from solicitors to clients has topped the list of reasons for grievance, followed closely by incompetence. A sample of 10 CABs in the South of England received 142 complaints about solicitors in a random three month period during which these were logged.

The Law Society does not publish a statistical breakdown of complaints it receives and does not normally investigate complaints of incompetence or negligence or anything else which falls short of misconduct. But the Society told the Royal Commission on Legal Services that in 1978 it received 5,000 complaints from laymen about solicitors, of which 39 per cent related to professional misconduct and so warranted further investigation. The remaining 70 per cent did not raise issues of misconduct and so were not investigated.

The NCC concludes firmly that effective machinery is needed to investigate complaints and defend cases which are justified and which are not, and that any such new system should seek to win the public confidence.

The Law Society will soon have a power under the Administration of Justice Bill to deal with complaints of inadequate professional services, and to refer matters of fact, although not to award compensation.

But this will not go far enough to win public confidence, the National Consumer Council believes. It argues for an independent body, perhaps Legal Council, with roughly equal numbers of lay and solicitor members. This Council could appoint a Legal Ombudsman, possibly more than one, to handle complaints from consumers more accessibly and impartially than the Law Society does at present.

A new standard of "quality of service" should be defined and enforced, based on the legal obligations set out in the Supply of Goods and Services Act of 1982 on all purveyors of services to act "with reasonable care and skill."

Rosemary Collins

DEMOCRATIC AND POPULAR REPUBLIC OF ALGERIA

Ministry of Energy and Chemical and Petrochemical Industries

NATIONAL OIL WELL COMPANY

NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL CALL TO TENDER

No. 9106.AY/DIV

The National Oil Well Company (ENTP) is launching a National and International Call to Tender for the supply of

Lot No. 1: PORTABLE COLUMN DRILLS

Lot No. 2: TRIMMING MACHINES

Lot No. 3: MILL WHEELS

This invitation to Tender is addressed solely to production companies — amalgamations, company representatives and other intermediaries being excluded, in accordance with the provisions of Law No. 78-02 of 11th February, 1978, concerning the state monopoly on foreign trade.

Companies interested in this invitation to Tender may obtain specifications on payment of 400 Algerian dinars, from the following address: Entreprise Nationale des Travaux aux Puits, Direction des Approvisionnements, 16 Route de Meftah, Oued Smar, El-Harrach, Alger, Algeria — as from the publication date of this notice.

Tenders drawn up in five (5) copies, should be sent in double-sealed and registered packet, to the Secretariat of the Direction Approvisionnements at the above address.

The outer envelope must be anonymous, carrying no marking except the endorsement: 'Appel d'offres National et International No. 9106.AY/DIV Confidentiel — A ne pas Ouvrir'.

Tenders must arrive by noon on Saturday, 15th June, 1985 at the latest. The option period shall be 180 days as from the closing date of this invitation to Tender.

DEMOCRATIC AND POPULAR REPUBLIC OF ALGERIA

MINISTRY OF ENERGY AND CHEMICAL AND PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRIES

NATIONAL OIL WELL COMPANY

(ENTREPRISE NATIONALE DES TRAVAUX AUX PUITES)

NOTICE OF UNRESTRICTED INTERNATIONAL CALL TO TENDER NO. 09093.AY/MF

THE NATIONAL OIL WELL COMPANY (ENTP) IS LAUNCHING AN INTERNATIONAL INVITATION TO TENDER OPEN TO ALL COMPETITORS, FOR THE PROVISION OF:

LOT 1 DRILL COLLARS

LOT 2 ROTARY TABLE 27 1/2" x 17 1/2"

LOT 3 CENTRIFUGAL MUD PUMPS
CENTRIFUGAL WATER PUMPS
ELECTRICAL PUMPS FOR WATER

This invitation to tender is addressed solely to Production Companies, amalgamations, company representatives and other intermediaries being excluded in accordance with the provisions of Law No. 78-02 of 11 February 1978, concerning the state monopoly on foreign trade.

Companies interested in this Call to Tender may obtain specifications on payment of the sum of four hundred (400) Algerian Dinars, from the following address:

ENTREPRISE NATIONALE DES TRAVAUX AUX PUITES (ENTP)
DIRECTION DES APPROVISIONNEMENTS

16 ROUTE DE MEFTAH

OUED SMAR

EL HARRACH, ALGER, ALGERIA

As from the publication date of this notice.

Offers drawn up in five (05) copies should be sent in double sealed and registered packet to the Secretariat de la Direction Approvisionnements at the above address.

The outer envelope must be anonymous, carrying no marking except the endorsement 'Appel a la Concurrence International Ouvert, Numero 09093.AY/MF — Confidentiel — a ne pas Ouvrir'.

The closing date for receipt of offers is set at 45 days as from the publication date of this notice.

Companies will be held by their offers for 180 days after the closing date of this invitation to tender.

DEMOCRATIC AND POPULAR REPUBLIC OF ALGERIA

MINISTRY OF ENERGY AND CHEMICAL AND PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRIES

NATIONAL OIL WELL COMPANY

(ENTREPRISE NATIONALE DES TRAVAUX AUX PUITES)

NOTICE OF UNRESTRICTED INTERNATIONAL CALL TO TENDER NO. 09092.AY/MF

THE NATIONAL OIL WELL COMPANY (ENTP) IS LAUNCHING AN INTERNATIONAL INVITATION TO TENDER OPEN TO ALL COMPETITORS, FOR THE PROVISION OF:

LOT NO. 1 WASHOVER PIPE

LOT NO. 2 MUD PUMP PRESSURE GAUGE PUMP SPEED INDICATORS
R.P.M. ROTARY SPEED METER

LOT NO. 3 WEIGHT INDICATORS

LOT NO. 4 COMPLETE MANUAL TONGS FOR DRILL COLLAR, DRILL PIPE AND CASING

LOT NO. 5 2-3/4 x 132' - 350T WELDLESS LINK

LOT NO. 6 DRILL PIPE ELEVATORS

LOT NO. 7 ROTARY SLIPS FOR DRILL PIPES 5" & 3 1/2"

LOT NO. 8 PIN DRIVE ROLLER KELLY PUSHING AND SQUARE DRIVE ROLLER KELLY PUSHING

LOT NO. 9 ROTATING AND CIRCULATING HEAD

LOT NO. 10 LOWER KELLY GUARD VALVE

LOT NO. 11 FISHING TOOLS

LOT NO. 12 AUTOLOCK SAFETY JOINT

LOT NO. 13 HYDRAULIC ROCK BIT UNDERREAMER

LOT NO. 14 CHECK VALVE

LOT NO. 15 UPPER KELLY COCKS

This invitation to tender is addressed solely to production companies, amalgamations, company representatives and other intermediaries being excluded in accordance with the provisions of Law No. 78-02 of 11 February 1978, concerning the state monopoly on foreign trade.

Companies interested in this call to tender may obtain specifications on payment of the sum of four hundred (400) Algerian dinars, from the following address:

ENTREPRISE NATIONALE DES TRAVAUX AUX PUITES (ENTP)
DIRECTION DES APPROVISIONNEMENTS

16 ROUTE DE MEFTAH

OUED SMAR

EL HARRACH, ALGER, ALGERIA

as from the publication date of this notice.

Offers drawn up in five (05) copies should be sent in double sealed and registered packet to the Secretariat de la Direction Approvisionnements at the above address.

The outer envelope must be anonymous, carrying no marking except the endorsement 'appel a la concurrence international ouvert, numero 09092.AY/MF — confidentiel — a ne pas ouvrir'.

The closing date for receipt of offers is set at 45 days as from the publication date of this notice. Companies will be held by their offers for 180 days after the closing date of this invitation to tender.

This advertisement does not constitute an offer or invitation to any person to apply for or purchase any of the shares to be offered. Application has been made to the Council of The Stock Exchange for the whole of the Ordinary Share capital of the Company, issued and to be issued, to be admitted to the Official List ("Listing").

COLOROLL GROUP PLC

(Incorporated and registered in England under the Companies Act 1948 to 1981 No. 1898197)

Offer for Sale

by

Charterhouse Japhet plc

of

13,500,000 Ordinary Shares of 10p each at 135p per share payable in full on application

Authorised	Share capital (Subject to Listing) in Ordinary Shares of 10p each	Issued or to be issued
£4,000,000		£2,725,000

The Group's principal business is the design and marketing of wallcoverings and soft furnishings for the international home fashion market. The Group is involved in the manufacture of wallcoverings and packaging products and sub-contracts the manufacture of its textile ranges. The Group includes companies operating in the UK, the United States and Australia.

The application list will open at 10.00 a.m. on Thursday, 2nd May, 1985 and may be closed at any time thereafter.

Copies of the Offer for Sale which comprises Listing Particulars (on the terms of which, alone, applications will be considered) with application forms, will be available from 29th April, 1985 from:

Charterhouse Japhet plc
1 Paternoster Row,
St. Pauls, London EC4M 7DH.
Barrett House,
53 Fountain Street, Manchester M2 2AN.
Rowe & Fison
1 Finsbury Avenue,
London EC2M 2PA.

and from the following branches of Lloyds Bank Plc:

Registrar's Department,
Jays Section,
P.O. Box 1000,
61 Moorgate,
London EC2R 6BH.
Birmingham,
125 Colmore Row.
Bristol,
55 Corn Street.
Bury,
57 Highgate Street.
Cardiff,
27 High Street.
Edinburgh,
113/115 George Street.
Glasgow,
12 Buchanan Street.
Leeds,
P.O. Box 96, 57 Park Row.
Manchester,
53 King Street.

The Offer for Sale which comprises Listing Particulars is published, with application forms, in today's Financial Times and Daily Telegraph.

Starkey stands by to ride Dafayna

D RACING

Richard Baerlein

The Guardian Classic Trial at Sandown on Saturday, coupled with events in Ireland, have tended to advance the confidence behind the 2,000 Guineas sponsored by General Accident.

Ladbrokes have priced Shaded in the running of a good gallop yesterday but 5-4 is the offer. Trainer Michael Stoute has not made a decision on who will ride Shaded in the 2,000 Guineas but he says Greville Starkey would be standing by to partner Dafayna in the 1,000 Guineas.

Damster, six lengths behind Shaded in the Craven Stakes, made all the running to win the Guardian race by a length from Petroski with Gallant Archer four lengths back in third.

The winner was the only one to have raced this season and the time, 5.02 seconds above standard, was no advertisement for the form.

Steve Gauthier told the trainer he thought his charge would get a mile and a half but the trainer was left in some doubt.

For a horse from a stable which has yet to have a winner, Petroski ran a good race. In fact, he probably had a harder time than Willie Carson would have liked, for he looked exhausted after the saddle had been removed.

Petroski could easily gain a place in the Derby and 20-1 each-way would look good should anything happen to Shaded, but quoted at 4-1 with Ladbrokes for the Ever Ready sponsored race.

River Mist disqualified in French Guineas

No Pass No Sale, the odds-on favourite, ridden by Yves St-Martin, and one of three runners saddled by Roger Collet for the French 2,000 Guineas at Longchamp yesterday, was disqualified for one of the second favourites, River Mist, at 3-1, who scored by three-quarters of a length.

River Mist, ridden by Patrick Biancone's star apprentice, Eric Legris, was pulled out from behind three horses two furlongs from home, seriously hampering Synofes, who finished fourth. The amended result was No Sale No Pass at 9-10 coupled in the betting with Armandien and Metys, followed by the other, Camille, ridden by Pat Eddery, with Gallant Archer hit his head on the stalls and came back streaming blood from the mouth. He moved up to challenge soon after entering the straight but back of a race then, he could meet the winner again in the Mecca Dante.

The first three in the Guardian race made 350,000 dollars, 90,000 gns and 4,100,000 dollars respectively, so it would appear that Lady Beaverbrook with Petroski has the best bargain to date.

The Whitbread Gold Cup never fails to provide excitement and once again it was only by a rapidly decreasing neck that Robert Barnshaw on By The Way, held last Saturday's Scottish Grand National winner, Andromeda, who found the distance just too short.

Having seen her son, Michael's Lettich so narrowly beaten by Special Cargo in last year's race, it was with some relief that Monica Dickinson heard the result over the Tannoy. Few had any doubt her well-handicapped horse had held on and she certainly deserved this victory.

It will now be a close race between Fred White and Monica Dickinson as to who will win the trainers' list for the National Hunt season.

Barnshaw had the winner first or second throughout and his enterprising tactics played a decisive part from the last fence, which he crossed six lengths clear of the rapidly improving Andromeda.

The ground firmed so rapidly on the chasing course that I was sorry the connections of the soft ground performer West Tip did not withdraw him. He was still made favourite but the danger of doing such a fine prospect injury, was very real. He ran a great race to finish fifth, making ground throughout the last mile.

In Ireland Vincent O'Brien's one-time Derby favourite Leading Counsel, was beaten two lengths by Dermot Weld's Theatrical, ridden by Lester Piggott. Theatrical, yet another winning offspring of Nureyev was receiving 8-1.

He had won his only race last season and until Saturday he had not been considered a Derby possibility. Corals offered the best Derby price of 16-1, while Hills offered Leading Counsel, once down to 7-1, at 14-1.

The Vincent O'Brien team does not appear to have fully recovered from their recent minor indisposition. The trainer will gallop Gold Crest on Tuesday before sending him to Newmarket. If he does not place, Law Society will take his place in the line-up.

RICHARD BAERLEIN'S SELECTIONS: NAR: DIVISIMA (4.30 Warwick). Next best: AL RYADH (3.30 Warwick).

Mrs Louise Gibbins, wife of Guardian Chairman Peter Gibbins, presents the Guardian Classic Trial trophy to James Delahouke, racing manager to Khalid Abdulla, who owns the winner, Damster. Picture by Kenneth Saunders

WARWICK

2 00 Amiga Borracha 3 30 Power Plan

2 30 Wan Chin 4 00 Red Red Rose

3 00 Flying Officer 4 30 Divisima

5 00 Kindjal

6 00 Kindjal

7 00 Kindjal

8 00 Kindjal

9 00 Kindjal

10 00 Kindjal

11 00 Kindjal

12 00 Kindjal

13 00 Kindjal

14 00 Kindjal

15 00 Kindjal

16 00 Kindjal

17 00 Kindjal

18 00 Kindjal

19 00 Kindjal

20 00 Kindjal

21 00 Kindjal

22 00 Kindjal

23 00 Kindjal

24 00 Kindjal

25 00 Kindjal

26 00 Kindjal

27 00 Kindjal

28 00 Kindjal

29 00 Kindjal

30 00 Kindjal

31 00 Kindjal

32 00 Kindjal

33 00 Kindjal

34 00 Kindjal

35 00 Kindjal

36 00 Kindjal

37 00 Kindjal

38 00 Kindjal

39 00 Kindjal

40 00 Kindjal

41 00 Kindjal

42 00 Kindjal

43 00 Kindjal

44 00 Kindjal

45 00 Kindjal

46 00 Kindjal

47 00 Kindjal

48 00 Kindjal

49 00 Kindjal

50 00 Kindjal

51 00 Kindjal

52 00 Kindjal

53 00 Kindjal

54 00 Kindjal

55 00 Kindjal

56 00 Kindjal

57 00 Kindjal

58 00 Kindjal

59 00 Kindjal

60 00 Kindjal

61 00 Kindjal

62 00 Kindjal

63 00 Kindjal

64 00 Kindjal

65 00 Kindjal

66 00 Kindjal

67 00 Kindjal

68 00 Kindjal

69 00 Kindjal

70 00 Kindjal

71 00 Kindjal

72 00 Kindjal

73 00 Kindjal

74 00 Kindjal

75 00 Kindjal

76 00 Kindjal

77 00 Kindjal

78 00 Kindjal

79 00 Kindjal

80 00 Kindjal

81 00 Kindjal

82 00 Kindjal

83 00 Kindjal

84 00 Kindjal

85 00 Kindjal

86 00 Kindjal

87 00 Kindjal

88 00 Kindjal

89 00 Kindjal

90 00 Kindjal

91 00 Kindjal

92 00 Kindjal

93 00 Kindjal

94 00 Kindjal

95 00 Kindjal

96 00 Kindjal

97 00 Kindjal

98 00 Kindjal

99 00 Kindjal

100 00 Kindjal

101 00 Kindjal

102 00 Kindjal

103 00 Kindjal

104 00 Kindjal

105 00 Kindjal

106 00 Kindjal

107 00 Kindjal

108 00 Kindjal

109 00 Kindjal

110 00 Kindjal

111 00 Kindjal

112 00 Kindjal

113 00 Kindjal

114 00 Kindjal

115 00 Kindjal

116 00 Kindjal

117 00 Kindjal

118 00 Kindjal

119 00 Kindjal

120 00 Kindjal

121 00 Kindjal

122 00 Kindjal

123 00 Kindjal

124 00 Kindjal

125 00 Kindjal

126 00 Kindjal

127 00 Kindjal

128 00 Kindjal

129 00 Kindjal

130 00 Kindjal

131 00 Kindjal

132 00 Kindjal

133 00 Kindjal

134 00 Kindjal

135 00 Kindjal

136 00 Kindjal

137 00 Kindjal

138 00 Kindjal

139 00 Kindjal

140 00 Kindjal

141 00 Kindjal

142 00 Kindjal

143 00 Kindjal

144 00 Kindjal

145 00 Kindjal

146 00 Kindjal

147 00 Kindjal

148 00 Kindjal

149 00 Kindjal

150 00 Kindjal

151 00 Kindjal

152 00 Kindjal

153 00 Kindjal

154 00 Kindjal

155 00 Kindjal

156 00 Kindjal

157 00 Kindjal

158 00 Kindjal

159 00 Kindjal

160 00 Kindjal

161 00 Kindjal

162 00 Kindjal

163 00 Kindjal

164 00 Kindjal

165 00 Kindjal

166 00 Kindjal

167 00 Kindjal

168 00 Kindjal

169 00 Kindjal

170 00 Kindjal

171 00 Kindjal

172 00 Kindjal

173 00 Kindjal

174 00 Kindjal

175 00 Kindjal

176 00 Kindjal

177 00 Kindjal

178 00 Kindjal

179 00 Kindjal

180 00 Kindjal

181 00 Kindjal

182 00 Kindjal

183 00 Kindjal

184 00 Kindjal

185 00 Kindjal

186 00 Kindjal

187 00 Kindjal

188 00 Kindjal

189 00 Kindjal

190 00 Kindjal

191 00 Kindjal

192 00 Kindjal

193 00 Kindjal

194 00 Kindjal

195 00 Kindjal

196 00 Kindjal

197 00 Kindjal

198 00 Kindjal

199 00 Kindjal

200 00 Kindjal

201 00 Kindjal

202 00 Kindjal

203 00 Kindjal

204 00 Kindjal

205 00 Kindjal

206 00 Kindjal

207 00 Kindjal

208 00 Kindjal

209 00 Kindjal

210 00 Kindjal

211 00 Kindjal

212 00 Kindjal

213 00 Kindjal

214 00 Kindjal

215 00 Kindjal

216 00 Kindjal

217 00 Kindjal

218 00 Kindjal

219 00 Kindjal

220 00 Kindjal

221 00 Kindjal

222 00 Kindjal

223 00 Kindjal

224 00 Kindjal

6:30 Today incl
8:35 The Week

- 32 Today including 7 a.m. News.
- 33 The Week on 4.
- 34 Glyn Worpall in the Archives.
- 35 News: Start the Week with Richard Baker.
- 36 News: Money Box. Financial advice.
- 37 Morning Story: The Gun by John O'Hara.
- 38 Daily Service.
- 39 News: Down Your Way in Lymington, Hampshire.
- 40 Poetry: Picasso's Verse requests.
- 41 News: You and Yours.
- 42 King Street Junior. Classroom serial with Peter Davison. & Language Unit.

- 40 The Archers.
- Woman's Hour.
- News; Afternoon Play: The Inter-
- act; Contract Spoof Thriller by

30 Young and Aspiring 3 Playwright Tamara Griffiths.
40 Story Time: Schoolgirls Own A... by Angela Brazil

8 P.M. News magazine.
 9 The Six O'Clock News.
 10 Nineteen Ninety-Four. Final episode of futuristic comedy.
 11 News: The Archers.
 12 Click (4). The Birds and the Cheese. Wildlife photography and studio portraits.

15 Monday, May 1. The Diemen's Land by Carolyn Sally
Jones. A visionary on a convict ship.

45 Kaleidoscope. Arts magazine.

15 A Book at Bedtime: Voices in an Room by Francis King (1)

15 The Financial World Tonight.
30 Today in Parliament.
• News; Weather; Shipping.

Corner. 2 5-3 0 Schools. 11 0 Stru
4. 11 30-12 10 am Open Universi
30-1 10 Schools Night-time Broadca
E

(VHF): 5 55 am Weather, Gwer
 dio 4, 6 25 Halo Brbl, 5 5 Brewha
 9 45 Gwynllyb, 10 30 Ar Dro, 11
 wyddon Da, 11 10 Ymmlon, 11
 andin Dwyddin, 12 27 am Tram, 1 yr Awr, 1 20 Bvd Natio, 1 50 (6) Gile glawr, 2 0 Gweler Radio 4, 5 6 P shawn, 6 0 Gweler Wales, 7 5 Gweler
 dio 4, 10 15 Newyddion, 11 50 Eit

Scotland (370m): 6 0am As Radn 4 5 4 45 Home and Morning Scotland. 4 45 Home
Radn. 11 5 Margaret's Gathering 12 10
In the Country. 12 30 10
Scotland: Report. 1 0 As Radn 4 5
10 55 2 3 Taking Issue with Colin B
10 55 3 Art Suttler. 2 0 (and Farm
10 55 4 0 News. 10 55 11 5
10 55 2 2 Farming News. 7 20 T
10 55 10 Scotland. 8 2 A Radn
6 News. Tom Ferrie. 12 5-Clea
Radio 4.

63jm) at the following times: GMT
 0 am Newsw. 7 0 New. 7 9 Trans. 4
 8 9 Reflections. 8 15 Goldline
 330 Anything Goes. 9 0 New. 2
 11th Prec. Rev. 9 15 Good Byed
 30 Filial New. 9 40 Lm. 2
 30 Bible. 10 0 Lm. 2

8 News About Britain: 11 15
Kathleen Ferrier: 12 0 Radio 4 News: 12 at 15 pm Brain of Britain 1985: 12
Sports Roundup: 1 0 News: 1 9
Twenty Nine Hours: 1 30 Sacred Symphonies: 3
Outlook: 2 45 The Poem Book: 3 0
Newswatch: 3 15 Ralph McTell and Friends
45 The Art of Kathleen Ferrier 4
News: 4 0 Commentary: 4 15 Computer
World: 4 30 Romantic Piano: 4 45
World Today: 5 0 News: 5 30
15 My Word: 6 0 News: 6 15
Kina

10 30 Financial News 10
 10 45 Sports Roundup 10
 11 9 Commentary 11 15 Current
 11 30 Brain of Britain 11 45
 12 9 News 12 9 am News About Britain
 12 15 Radio Newsworld 12 30 March 6
 1 9 News; Outlook 1 30
 1 45 Computer World 1 55
 2 British Press Review 2 15
 2 30 Sports International 2 55
 3 News About Britain 3 15 The

WAVELENGTHS: Radio 4—1.500m (200kHz), London only 417m (720kHz), VHF: Radio 4—1.67m (1.715kHz), VHF: Radio 2—0.933kHz, 330m (909kHz), VHF: Radio 5—0.5m (1.663kHz), 275m (1.093kHz).

GURRY, 379 3559, CC 741.
 Gps. Sales $30 6123. Exts.
 Sat. 5.30 and 8.30. Wed.
 May 3.0.
 THEATRE OF COMEDY CO.
 NORTON — MICHAEL
 CHURCHMAN, 301, 748
 Kings Road, SWS (Nearby Tube Station).
 FAVOURITES OF THE MOON
 (13). Film at 2.05, 4.15, 6.30.
 8.50. Advance bookings last perf.
 1 Rupert Everett, Milla
 Richardson in DANCE WITH
 A STRANGER (15), 2.30, 4.
 7.0, 9.0.

3.20, 5.10, 7.10, 9.10. Lind
Tickets Bookable. All ways £1
SCREEN ON THE HILL. 435 3

2. 2.37
 3. 2.37
 4. 2.37
 5. 2.37
 6. 2.37
 7. 2.37
 8. 2.37
 9. 2.37
 10. 2.37
 11. 2.37
 12. 2.37
 13. 2.37
 14. 2.37
 15. 2.37
 16. 2.37
 17. 2.37
 18. 2.37
 19. 2.37
 20. 2.37
 21. 2.37
 22. 2.37
 23. 2.37
 24. 2.37
 25. 2.37
 26. 2.37
 27. 2.37
 28. 2.37
 29. 2.37
 30. 2.37
 31. 2.37
 32. 2.37
 33. 2.37
 34. 2.37
 35. 2.37
 36. 2.37
 37. 2.37
 38. 2.37
 39. 2.37
 40. 2.37
 41. 2.37
 42. 2.37
 43. 2.37
 44. 2.37
 45. 2.37
 46. 2.37
 47. 2.37
 48. 2.37
 49. 2.37
 50. 2.37
 51. 2.37
 52. 2.37
 53. 2.37
 54. 2.37
 55. 2.37
 56. 2.37
 57. 2.37
 58. 2.37
 59. 2.37
 60. 2.37
 61. 2.37
 62. 2.37
 63. 2.37
 64. 2.37
 65. 2.37
 66. 2.37
 67. 2.37
 68. 2.37
 69. 2.37
 70. 2.37
 71. 2.37
 72. 2.37
 73. 2.37
 74. 2.37
 75. 2.37
 76. 2.37
 77. 2.37
 78. 2.37
 79. 2.37
 80. 2.37
 81. 2.37
 82. 2.37
 83. 2.37
 84. 2.37
 85. 2.37
 86. 2.37
 87. 2.37
 88. 2.37
 89. 2.37
 90. 2.37
 91. 2.37
 92. 2.37
 93. 2.37
 94. 2.37
 95. 2.37
 96. 2.37
 97. 2.37
 98. 2.37
 99. 2.37
 100. 2.37

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

KILTS ALL ROUND: The Queen reviews some of the 1,000 Queen's Scouts in a St George's Day parade at Windsor Castle yesterday, when Burma Star veterans (centre) gathered at the Cenotaph in London for a remembrance service. Right: The Prince of Wales, wearing the uniform of the Gordon Highlanders, laying wreaths with the Italian foreign minister, Giulio Andreotti, at the Anglo military cemetery yesterday.

Thatcher anxious to meet Soviet leader

By Colin Brown, Political Staff

Mrs Thatcher yesterday raised the prospect of a meeting with the Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, at the UN session in September. She emphasised the need for more East-West exchanges to assist the arms reductions talks.

Questioned on a phone-in programme broadcast live by the BBC World Service, the Prime Minister reaffirmed her view, given after Mr Gorbachev's recent visit to Britain before he became leader, that he was someone she could "do business with."

Mrs Thatcher's remarks on the Soviet leader, coupled with a defence of President Reagan's star wars policy, will be seen as part of an effort by the Government to limit any diplomatic damage which might have been done by the explosion of five alleged Soviet spies last week and to continue with a united approach to arms talks.

The Prime Minister stressed the importance of more contacts between leaders of East and West in improving understanding between the two sides which she said shared the common goal of preventing global war.

Describing her earlier talks with Mr Gorbachev, she said: "He was very personable, very self-confident and very self-assured but very willing to debate and discuss in the way we would."

She added: "I don't know whether I will be going to the UN at the same time. Obviously I have to take advantage of an occasion to meet him again. Yes, I do believe I can do business with him — you often have to do business with people you disagree with."

However, Mrs Thatcher said the West should not expect any change in policy by the Soviet Union, despite its new leadership.

She also defended President Reagan's policy of continuing research on star wars technology, emphasising that it was entirely a defensive system which, if perfected, would have to be negotiated before it could be deployed.

Mrs Thatcher also repeated her intention of seeking a third term in office. She said her greatest admiration was for Winston Churchill. She said later: "Winston became prime minister when he was 68 and presidents have been very successful over 70, so I hope to go on. I really think I would like to carry the policies forward."

"We have changed many attitudes. You only have to look when trade unionists are voluntarily retooling their ballots — that shows how much attitudes have changed. I want to go on a third time."

Mrs Thatcher brushed aside criticism that she had overruled herself with her Far East tour, and told a 55-year-old woman in France that she had no secret to offer about her energy and no secret diet.

"I was born fit and I was brought up to work extremely hard," she said. She also strenuously defended her espousal of Victorian values.

Mrs Thatcher said she would "joy to go on being Prime Minister" and said she had no greater aspiration, but she did appear to use the royal "we" when she referred to her loss of voice in Sri Lanka. "We managed to deliver a 45 minute speech," she said.

Soldiers escape as IRA shells army post

From Paul Johnson in Belfast

British soldiers escaped injury early yesterday when their observation post close to the border with the Irish Republic came under mortar fire.

The IRA fired a total of eight mortar shells in the direction of the post, near Jonesborough, South Armagh, which overlooks the Belfast to Dublin railway line. Three shells exploded, but missed their intended target.

At least one missile detonated close to the firing point, a trailer parked behind an unoccupied house 350 yards from the post. Windows of an occupied house nearby were shattered.

The mortars, steel tubes tied together to form a battery and mounted on a platform, were the same design as those used in the attack on Newry police station this year when nine officers were killed.

After that attack, the IRA claimed it had perfected the weapon, although security specialists were adamant that the loss of life owed more to chance than calculated accuracy and expertise, a view which appears to be borne out by this latest incident.

Wright camp says retiring leader backs Todd

Evans 'unfairly dictating terms' of new TGWU poll

By Patrick Wintour, Labour Staff

Mr Moss Evans was accused last night of trying unfairly to dictate the terms of the new election of his successor as general secretary of the Transport and General Workers' Union.

The backers of Mr George Wright, who challenged the original election of Mr Ron Todd, believe that Mr Evans is openly backing Mr Todd, and that such favouritism is unfitting the man who has to act as chief scrutineer.

The Wright camp is bitter over a proposed national newspaper advertisement intended to give the reasons for the re-run but which will include last week's letter from Mr Todd to the union executive insisting that the ballot be held again to clear the union's name.

Mr Wright, the Welsh regional secretary, is asking that his own earlier letter outlining his request for a further ballot be printed alongside that of Mr Todd.

Mr Todd said last night that the publication of his letter was simply intended to help inform the membership on the background to the executive's decision last week to call a second ballot.

He said: "The executive were not intending to hold a second ballot on the basis of the evidence and allegations of irregularities."

"It was my insistence that I would not take up the post without a re-run which brought about the decision to hold a ballot."

Mr Todd's letter reads in part: "You will appreciate that over the last four weeks I have thought long on the crisis that is facing the union, and I believe there is clearly a situation in which certain factions within our union are lending themselves to the attacks by sections of the press."

"As a consequence, whatever the outcome of the executive council's examination, I believe that pre-requisite to assuming leadership of our union, namely the confidence, trust and unity of the membership, has been badly damaged."

"Unfortunately, however innocent any individuals may emerge from any enquiry, a cloud will continue to hang over the union in the future. I am convinced therefore that there is no course other than to hold a fresh ballot."

"It is not my desire or intention to take over the responsibilities with an atmosphere of suspicion prevailing in many regions, and I would hope that the executive council will take into account, not only the wider implications of what has occurred, but also my own personal beliefs."

Mr Wright's camp does not accept that the inclusion of Mr Todd's letter in any advertisement is intended as a simple piece of documentation of the reasons for the re-run.

Mr Wright intends to write to newspaper editors asking for them to publish his own letter, if Mr Todd's alone is placed in the advertisement.

Mr Wright is also angry with Mr Evans for stating that neither candidate must criticise union policy. Mr Wright is increasingly regarding himself as the little man up against the union machine and is certain to oppose such restrictions on his campaign. He is likely to take the opportunity of this week's Welsh TUC — which Mr Todd will also be attending — to spell out his beliefs.

Mr Todd said he would not be altering his diary to undertake a special campaign.

The ballot will last from May 13 to June 7. The result will be declared on June 15.

Nod from NCCL for aid to rightwing

Continued from page one

tion of a new civil liberties organisation.

It was proposed by Ms Patricia Hewitt, former NCCL general secretary, who said the organisation was a broad coalition, and that a new organisation had been tried before but failed.

The meeting also welcomed the establishment last week of the all-party Parliamentary Civil Liberties Group, backed the principle of equal access to education and public services, and approved a variety of reforming resolutions on the penal system, the security services, the Government's immigration policies, Northern Ireland, and women's rights.

But most time and feeling was spent on advice policy and the miners' strike. The meeting attracted high interest from trade unions affiliated to the NCCL, and a resolution was passed criticising the Government, the police, and the courts over the miners' strike.

A resolution saying "any person has the right to choose whether or not to join, or to remain a member of, a trade union" was withdrawn by its proposer, Mr Tony Smythe, an ex-former NCCL general secretary.

On advice policy, Mr Ivan Gelfand argued: "We have to fight the corner of all those who are oppressed, even if we find them disgusting."

But Mr Stephen Sedley said that racial minorities would see the NCCL as hypocrites if they just want to embrace the National Front, and Ms Melissa Benn said that black members and black NCCL staff would be alienated.

Another member said: "The NF don't seriously want advice, they just want to National Frontise, and they've succeeded. There are much more powerful bodies threatening civil liberties than the NF."

Some local party delegates accused him of a sell-out, and Mr Livingston said afterwards that there had been a "full and frank exchange of views."

Events at the GLC "couldn't have come at a worse possible time."

The GLC controversy appeared to be reflected in the comparatively low vote for Mr Livingston in the first round.

The result in the first round was Mr Livingston 31 votes, Miss Abbott 26, Mr John Ryan

Skinner claims vendetta after ban on meeting

By Susan Tirbatt

Police yesterday stopped a public political meeting at which Mr Dennis Skinner, the Labour MP for Bolsover, was to have spoken.

It was organised by a miners' welfare club in his constituency, and the MP describes the police action as a vendetta because of the miners' strike.

The meeting at Plesley miners' welfare club in Derbyshire in support of Labour candidates in Thursday's county council elections, was arranged and advertised for 11am yesterday. Similar meetings had been held there for the past 20 years, officials said yesterday.

But on Saturday the local police inspector told the club's officials that their own rules outlawed meetings being held on the premises before noon, and they should not go ahead.

Inspector Andrew Hardy, of Shirebrook police station, said he had examined the club's rules and pointed out to the secretary that the licence certificate granted by local magistrates did not approve meetings being held before noon on Sundays.

His suggestion that the meeting should be held in the club's car park was rejected, and the meeting was cancelled.

Mr Skinner, who was to have spoken for the Labour county council candidate at the meeting, said police in the area had never let up since the strike.

"Obviously they don't like me — I called them Mrs Thatcher's private army. It's a vendetta," the MP said.

He said he had been attending meetings in the club for 15 years since he had been an MP with no trouble from the police. It had not been planned to open the bar for the meeting.

Inspector Hardy refused to comment on why he had decided to scrutinise the club's rules this year, or how he had learned that the meeting was planned for 11am.

Local police liaison meetings with the Plesley parish council have been suspended since the beginning of the miners' strike.

Livingstone selected

Continued from page one

meeting over his part in the GLC Labour group's recent decision to set a rate in opposition to the London Labour Party's agreed strategy against rate-capping.

Some local party delegates accused him of a sell-out, and Mr Livingston said afterwards that there had been a "full and frank exchange of views."

Events at the GLC "couldn't have come at a worse possible time."

The GLC controversy appeared to be reflected in the comparatively low vote for Mr Livingston in the first round.

The result in the first round was Mr Livingston 31 votes, Miss Abbott 26, Mr John Ryan

15, and Mr Anthony West three.

Mr Livingston said that he thought a block of 25 delegates to the Brent East's general committee had been against his candidature long before the rate-capping dispute.

Mr Livingston stressed after yesterday's selection meeting that he was not worried about legal action from Mr Fresson. He said the resolution procedure had been so correct that "even Lord Denning would find it impossible to fault."

A former Government minister, Miss Joan Lester, was last night adopted as prospective Labour candidate in the Rees constituency.

GUARDIAN CROSSWORD 17,222

AUDREUS

ACROSS

- 1 Outspoken guide? (6).
- 4 Harry is crazy about the artist getting rather superior (8).
- 9 A small cut but it's a bargain (4).
- 10 The fellow having to use the telephone is withholding information (8, 2).
- 11 The book's come back with the cover dull (6).
- 12 Determined our steel production (6).
- 13 ... with minute accuracy before getting round (that's right) to the charge (6).
- 15 How to address Sir? (4).
- 16 It's a bit of a laugh, the learner giving instruction to the dog (4).
- 17 Elusive tree voices, nothing lost by not telling (5).
- 21 Many get taken in by introduction to bar (8).
- 22 Girl had pen to swap (6).
- 24 Daily over northern trip, in Wales (10).
- 25 Too much of a meal, sorry (4).
- 26 Do love to be beside the sea — not a hope (6).
- 27 Be in contact this time, become a member (6).

DOWN

- 1 He gives Brown a turn, coming in the entrance (7).
- 2 One sorely attracted is about to be put off (5).
- 3 It's a hundred-to-one a hundred girls will all be chunder (7).
- 5 Stop, take a b-break (6).
- 6 Did the staff come in last month after her divorce? (9).
- 7 He can't accept a man like Thomas? (7).
- 8 Look away! It could be — eel — ever so nasty (5, 4, 4).
- 14 Most of the street is at the party and it's getting louder (5).
- 16 Took the initiative after being injured, and dashed (7).
- 18 Changed colour again when the note was brought in — been weeping? (3, 4).
- 19 That meat in Latin — Come, boy! (7).
- 20 A craze to hide the mineral (6).
- 23 That instrument dad is holding — one on which the Japanese play (5).

SOLUTION (left) TO PRIZE PUZZLE 17,215

Winner of this week's £20 prize is J. M. Haslam, of 25 Meadowside, Upton, Wirral, Merseyside. Runners-up (£10 book token each) are: Kevin Graham, of 4 Woodlands View, Cleadon, Sunderland; Mrs Monica Boothroyd, of Lawnswood Cottage, 41 Wotton Road, Exeter; and Ms Caroline Skinner, of 126 Gloucester Road, Kingston-upon-Thames, Surrey.

Union immunities plans

Continued from page one

eral election manifesto is Labour's commitment to remove all US nuclear bases from Britain.

Mr Neil Kinnock, the Party leader, has recently said he hopes this can be achieved within a year of Labour taking office.

Mr Hattersley, however, has made it clear that he wishes to clear up ambiguities in the policy before making any detailed commitments.

Labour defence experts are determined that the policy should apply only to four bases — the submarine pens in Scotland where the Trident will be docked, the air base at Alconbury where the F11 nuclear fighter bombers are based, and the two cruise missile bases at Fylingdales and Greenham Common.

The party's supporters within CND will not be satisfied with this list, which excludes dozens of other US bases or listening posts used as back-up for the US nuclear capability.

The party leaders are confident that they will win on both counts, but they are concentrating at the moment on the issues raised on economic policy.

The problem of 'own goals' by Labour is also being closely watched. Mr Hattersley included last week's blocking of Social Democratic leader, Dr David Owen, from speaking at the despatch box in the Commons under this heading.

He attacked the Militant organisation of the strike by schoolchildren as 'saboteurs' of Labour's election chances.

THE WEATHER

Mainly dry

FRONTAL troughs will move south-east across Britain ending the day bringing rain to most areas.

London: SE. Out to England, Channel, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

Wales: SE. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

SW: NW. Out to Wales, Lake District, light rain, first showers, 11.00-12.00, temp 8 to 10C (46-50F).

AROUND THE WORLD

Land-time reports

Location	Time	Temp	Wind	Cloud
London	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Paris	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Brussels	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Amsterdam	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Frankfurt	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Berlin	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Munich	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Vienna	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Zurich	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Geneva	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Basel	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Stuttgart	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Düsseldorf	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Cologne	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Dortmund	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Essen	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Duisburg	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Münster	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bielefeld	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Osnabrück	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wuppertal	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Solingen	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Remscheid	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Witten	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Velbert	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Erkrath	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Heiligenhaushaus	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wesel	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Moers	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Recklinghausen	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bochum	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Unio	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Witten	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Velbert	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Erkrath	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Heiligenhaushaus	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wesel	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Moers	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Recklinghausen	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bochum	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0
Unio	10.00	10.0	10.0	10.0

AROUND BRITAIN

Reports for the 24 hours up to 6 pm

Location	Temp	Wind	Cloud
London	10.0	10.0	10.0
Paris	10.0	10.0	10.0
Brussels	10.0	10.0	10.0
Amsterdam	10.0	10.0	10.0
Frankfurt	10.0	10.0	10.0
Berlin	10.0	10.0	10.0
Munich	10.0	10.0	10.0
Vienna	10.0	10.0	10.0
Zurich	10.0	10.0	10.0
Geneva	10.0	10.0	10.0
Basel	10.0	10.0	10.0
Stuttgart	10.0	10.0	10.0
Düsseldorf	10.0	10.0	10.0
Cologne	10.0	10.0	10.0
Dortmund	10.0	10.0	10.0
Essen	10.0	10.0	10.0
Duisburg	10.0	10.0	10.0
Münster	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bielefeld	10.0	10.0	10.0
Osnabrück	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wuppertal	10.0	10.0	10.0
Solingen	10.0	10.0	10.0
Remscheid	10.0	10.0	10.0
Witten	10.0	10.0	10.0
Velbert	10.0	10.0	10.0
Erkrath	10.0	10.0	10.0
Heiligenhaushaus	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wesel	10.0	10.0	10.0
Moers	10.0	10.0	10.0
Recklinghausen	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bochum	10.0	10.0	10.0
Unio	10.0	10.0	10.0
Witten	10.0	10.0	10.0
Velbert	10.0	10.0	10.0
Erkrath	10.0	10.0	10.0
Heiligenhaushaus	10.0	10.0	10.0
Wesel	10.0	10.0	10.0
Moers	10.0	10.0	10.0
Recklinghausen	10.0	10.0	10.0
Bochum	10.0	10.0	